A Love Affair With a Carnival

Jim Tuppenny has built the Penn Relays into the world's biggest track extravaganza. Now he's going to see what he can do with the City of Philadelphia

By Jim DeStefano, '71

On a clear day, Jim Tuppenny can see forever from his new 20th-floor office in Center City.

He can see an 8-year-old boy, holding a brown-bag lunch with one hand and his brother's hand with the other, crossing a street in West Philadelphia and coming upon Franklin Field for the first time. This is part of Tuppenny's oldest memory of the Penn Relays, and his most vivid.

Tuppenny's 52-year involvement with the Relays is much more a love affair than a mere association. With the exception of a two-year Navy tour during World War II that took him to the Pacific rather than Spruce Street, Tuppenny has spent April's last weekend inside the big horseshoe on 33rd Street 50 times since 1935.

Tuppenny, '50, has watched the Relays, and he has competed and coached in them. For the last 19 years, he has directed the 93-year-old event, the oldest track meet in the world and, without much question, the best. There now are close to 15,000 competitors, and Tuppenny seems to have at least that many Relays-related tales to tell.

There is, for example, the story of Tuppenny's cab ride in Houston, Texas. "I'm in the cab and the driver asks me where I'm from," said Tuppenny. "When I told him I was from Penn, he holds up his arm and points to his watch. He had won it at the Penn Relays."

Or there's the recruiting mission to Richmond, Va. "The boy was living with his grandparents," Tuppenny said. "The grandmother said she knew about Penn. She had won a medal at the Relays when she was in elementary school."

Jim Tuppeny was captain of the 1950 track team and set a new Explorer record of 13 feet in the pole vault.

But always, there first is the brown-bag lunch and the brother's hand.

"Memories?" Tuppeny said. "My first-time—1935. It was sensational. I can see it like it was yesterday. We lived in Sharon Hill so we walked to Darby and took the No. 11 trolley to 34th and Woodland. Walked to Spruce Street. There was Franklin Field, right in front of us.

"We passed Museum Field and they were throwing the hammer. I didn't know what it was, but I can remember seeing a guy with a 'Y' on his jersey. My brother told me he was from Yale."

Chuck Tuppeny, Jim's brother, was competing for West Catholic that day. While he did, his young brother found a seat in a corner of the stadium, and saw enough to know that he wanted to see more.

In the future, there is reason to believe that the 1935 Penn Relays will share space with this year's classic in Tuppeny's mental scrapbook.

"I'm sure my last one as a director will be a tear-jerker," he said.

At 60, Tuppeny is yielding his post as choreographer of the Relays, but not in favor of golf clubs and an easy chair. Instead, he already has begun his new assignment as the executive director for Philadelphia's Convention and Visitors Bureau, the kind of challenge Tuppeny always has found stimulating.

From that 20th-floor office, Tuppeny's view of the skyline is breathtaking, although the first thing one might notice is the unsightly scaffolding draping Billy Penn. One might regard that everlasting project as the sign of a city in trouble. But Tuppeny sees what he often has seen, even when others haven't.

Potential. Opportunity. Excitement.

This is not much different than the view Tuppeny had in the mid-1930s, when he felt himself being pulled in the direction of track and field.

"My brother had the biggest influence on my track career," Tuppeny said. "I had this feeling that track was something I wanted to get involved in. Another factor was that West Catholic always had outstanding track teams. I knew that I wanted to be on that school's team."

Under coach John Glascott, West still was a powerhouse in 1943, thanks in no small measure to a senior from Sharon Hill. Tuppeny was the Catholic League champion in the pole vault and high jump, and won the vault and high and low hurdles in the city title meet in which West defeated Overbrook.

Tuppeny says that Glascott was a particularly helpful influence on his career, and while at West Catholic he learned of another man who would become one. Frank Wetzler's North Catholic teams always had impressed Tuppeny favorably, and when he entered La Salle College after the war, his recommendation helped Wetzler win the track job.

The marriage worked. Tuppeny was undefeated for four years in the vault in dual and triangular meets, won AAU championships in the vault and high hurdles, and years later named a race at the Penn Relays after the late track and cross country coach of the Explorers.

Al Cantello, '55, came to La Salle a few years later and went on to throw the javelin in the Olympics. He says that he isn't the least bit surprised that Tuppeny is regarded as one of the top track and field experts in the nation.

"One of the reasons for his success as a coach, and this will be a little simplistic, is that he never was a great, great athlete," said Cantello, longtime track and cross country coach at the U.S. Naval Academy. "He was a harbinger of the decathlon, he could do several events well. But I think he had a void to fill, a need, a desire to excel. And he went on to be a great coach."

Malvern Prep never had a track and field program before Tuppeny arrived to teach economics and social studies in 1950. But, demonstrating the organizational skills that would be essential in putting together an event as massive as the Penn Relays, Tuppeny built a team that won two Catholic state championships and was undefeated in 1954.

Tuppeny, who won a half-dozen medals as a World War II sailor, just as easily could be sitting behind a mahogany desk in some school district today. He taught for 17 years and eventually earned a secondary-school principal's certificate.

But coaching was in his blood. In 1954 he began a 13-year association with the legendary Jumbo Elliott at Villanova as an assistant in track and cross country. During this time the Wildcats dominated Eastern track, winning championships, producing All-Americans, and qualifying Olympians.

"Jumbo was very instrumental in helping me establish a coaching philosophy," Tuppeny said. "Mine was that you had to have a plan, you had to know where you were and be willing to reevaluate. And that nothing came easy. Jumbo gave me an opportunity to coach, and I was thankful for that."

Actually, Tuppeny was given more than the opportunity to coach. He did the bulk of the recruiting—"he was an awesome recruiter," Cantello said—handled 90 percent of the correspondence, ordered equipment, filed entries, directed home meets and hired meet officials.

In short, Tuppeny was introduced to the sort of tediousness that make the Penn Relays such a monumental undertaking.

"Putting on the Penn Relays is like having an Olympics every year," Cantello said. "It's a bureaucratic nightmare."

While Villanova's program was winning medals and headlines, Penn's was crawling along at a snail's pace. In 1965, the rag-tag Quakers didn't even bother to compete in the IC4A meet. The next year, Tuppenny grabbed Penn's track and cross country teams by the horns.

"When he took over, Penn was a blight, a doormat," Cantello said. "What he did, he did with work, and not in one or two years."

What Tuppenny did was win 17 Ivy League championships and compile records of 69-9 in outdoor track and 99-6 in cross country.

"He was the greatest track and field coach in Ivy League history," said Herb Hartnett, director of sports information at Penn who has worked closely with Tuppenny in the staging of the Relays. "His relationship with his athletes was extraordinary. He was a great leader, tactician and trainer. It was no small feat to coach the cross country and indoor and outdoor track teams, but to handle the Penn relays too required great administrative abilities."

The Relays were closing in on their 75th anniversary when Tuppenny began his stewardship in 1969. When he gave up his coaching job 10 years later, he said the two positions had become too much for one man to handle.

Of course, that was the fault of Tuppenny, whose attitude always has been not to be content with a good thing. Make it better, "Tup" will say.

In 1969 the Relays were a compact, two-day event involving about 5,000 athletes and 3,000 teams. Today, the show goes on for six days, and the numbers have more than doubled. There have been additions, and there have been changes: Tuppenny, flicking criticism off his shoulders like it was so much dandruff, converted to the metric system in 1976; he added a full day of women's events in 1978 ("I thought, 'Why not be a leader?'" he says.); introduced the marathon; and re-introduced the decathlon after a 40-year hiatus.

"He didn't play it safe," Hartnett said. "He could have but he didn't. The Relays had 75 years of real success. But he fiddled with it and virtually everything he touched turned to gold."

"We try to provide good competition at all levels," Tuppenny said. "Grade school, junior high, high school, college, the graduate level, the handicapped. We try not to slight any area. And a very important part of what we do is try to whet the appetites of elementary school kids."

"Beyond that, there are some other reasons we've been successful. The Relays are more than a track meet. I use the word 'carnival'. It's like a happening."

"I also think we have the best officials in the world. They're all volunteers, and they come from all over the country. In 1984, 28 Penn Relays' officials were picked to work the (Summer) Olympics and another 25 were alternates."

"And there are no dead spots. We set a record last year—there was three seconds between the time one race ended and another began, but usually there are 30 to 40 seconds. The people are constantly being entertained."

"The fact that we have diversified competition, and that it's excellent, helps. Many teams come to qualify for other meets—the NCAAs, The Athletics Congress championships, the Olympic trials. The fact that we have a good track and good competition helps."

But without Tuppenny's string-pulling, the tent would collapse on this carnival. He writes form letters, mails entry forms to the teams and formal invitations to the officials. He orders prizes and verifies records. He writes out, long hand, the voluminous program of events. He checks out the track and checks on hotel accommodations. He worries about the weather.

"Running the Penn Relays is in itself a profession," Cantello said.

Somehow, Tuppenny has jammed some other elements onto his resume. He has been president of the NCAA Track Coaches Association. President of the Ivy League Track Coaches Association. Vice president of The Athletics Congress, the governing body for track and field in the United States. Chairman of the Site Selection Committee for the 1984 Summer Olympics. Coach of the nation's 1982 World Cup team. Curator of all the athletic facilities on Penn's campus—it was Tuppenny, for example, who oversaw the recent renovation of the 60-year-old Palestra.

And now Tuppenny is moving on to a new task that is going to demand old virtues.

Tom Muldoon, the president of the Convention and Visitors Bureau, believes there are a plethora of athletic-related reasons for people to visit Philadelphia and spend money.

When Muldoon looks out his office window, he can see some potentially wonderful things: sports conventions and clinics; an Army-Navy football weekend that includes basketball doubleheaders with Big 5 schools; NCAA championship events; a college baseball tournament matching the top teams in the nation; a splashier Philadelphia Marathon; and much more.

And in Tuppenny, with his contacts, his enormous energy and his uncanny ability to put people to work, he sees a man he believes can pull it all together.

"He's a known entity," Muldoon said. "He's well-respected and he brings credibility to what we're trying to do. He kind of knows all the people it's necessary to know, or he knows someone who does."

It would be fitting to say that Tuppenny is going to be missed at the Penn relays, but he says he's not going to be missing.

"It was an extremely hard decision," Jim Tuppenny said about leaving Penn. "But now I feel I can help promote the Relays by getting the city behind it."

"And besides, as I've told the people at Penn, I'll be in the bullpen if anyone needs me."

"The Closest Thing to the Irreplaceable Man"

President, Other Government Officials Praise Bob Ames at Symposium and Dinner on Campus

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

William J. Casey delivers keynote address at memorial dinner in honor of Bob Ames.

Appearances by CIA Director William J. Casey and Richard Helms, the former director of Central Intelligence, highlighted a memorial symposium and dinner in honor of Robert C. Ames, '56, on La Salle's campus, December 11.

The symposium, which was devoted to "A Survey of Themes in the Middle East," was held during that day in the Dan Rodden Theatre. It featured presentations by a number of former friends and colleagues of Ames who was serving as director of the CIA's Office of Analysis for the Near East and South Asia when he was murdered in the bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, Lebanon in 1983.

Ames, a member of La Salle's 1953-54 NCAA Championship basketball team, was honored at a memorial dinner following the symposium in the La Salle Union Ballroom. At that time, La Salle's Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., posthumously bestowed the university's President's Medal upon Ames and a plaque was dedicated in his memory. Ames' mother, Helen, his widow, Yvonne, and their six children were present for the ceremonies.

Casey, the keynote speaker at the dinner, arrived at La Salle's campus after spending the day in Washington testifying before the House Intelligence Committee investigating the controversial arms sale to Iran. It turned out to be Casey's last public appearance before suffering a stroke and subsequent brain tumor that led to his resignation of the CIA directorship.

Recalling Ames "as about the closest thing to the irreplaceable man because he not only had great knowledge but exceptional poise and an authoritative presence," Casey read letters from "two of the strongest and most fervent friends and admirers of Bob Ames," President Ronald Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

The President congratulated La Salle University officials for paying tribute to the memory of a "truly superior public servant." Then, noting the complexity of the world situation, he added, "To know the Middle East as well as Bob did, and to give proper and eloquent advice to those of us who relied so much upon him, required a rare kind of wisdom.

"La Salle's motto, I am told, is 'Virtue and Knowledge'. In both the ability and dedication of Bob Ames, I cannot imagine any better fulfillment of that motto."

Shultz, in his letter, explained how much he valued Ames' expertise on many subjects, particularly on how Arabs think, feel, and react. The Secretary of State described how Bob's experience had given him a special appreciation of the relationship between policy, diplomacy, and intelligence.

"This appreciation and Bob's individual talents allowed him to serve two administrations as a senior advisor," Shultz added. "He provided major support to President Carter during the Camp David peace process, and to President Reagan in our efforts to pick up the pieces from Lebanon and fashion a peace accord in that region."

Casey added that Ames "had perhaps the keenest insights into the Arab mind of any individual in government." He recalled how Bob was "just as comfortable sitting cross-legged in the Arabian desert with Bedouin Shaykhs as he was in the White House briefing Presidents."

Helms, the former U.S. Ambassador to Iran, discussed "The Craft of Intelligence" at the day-long symposium. He described how Ames once wrote a paper to give a young associate a feel of the Middle East where he just had been assigned.

"It was a labor of love on Bob's part because he was under no obligation to indoctrinate his inexperienced colleague," Helms recalled. "But he was fully aware of the so-called culture shock which hits Americans as they learn about the Arab world. And he wanted to get this young man off on the right foot. I hope it leaves with you today the thought that it's a wide world out there. There are many cultures in it and it behooves us to learn more about them."

William Quandt, a former National Security Council member who is now a senior fellow with The Brookings Institute, described "The Arab-Israeli Peace Process" at the symposium and spent considerable time explaining the role played by Ames in attempting to bring some stability to the Middle East. Quandt said that the Middle East peace process has simply "not been one of our highest priorities" and since 1979 has become much more of a slogan than a reality.

"Only once," Quandt said, "did we really seriously try to energize the peace process, and it came after another tragedy—the disastrous war in Lebanon in the summer of 1982. Out of that fiasco there was a widespread realization that something had to be done to re-establish American creditability and leadership if our own national interests were not to suffer."

Graham Fuller

When Secretary of State Shultz came into office with a "professed desire to take the pressure off the Middle East situation," he surrounded himself, not with people from "conventional parts of the bureaucracy," but he reached out where he thought he could find the best advice. Some of those individuals, like Henry Kissinger, came from outside government. So did Bob Ames although he would not normally have been included in the policy deliberations of the State Department because of his position at the CIA.

"But Bob had a reputation for clear thinking, experience, and good judgment," recalled Quandt, qualities that were desperately needed in that very sensitive period, late summer of 1982, to think about what could be done to get the United States out ahead of the mess in Beirut and to get us identified again with the movement toward peace. Out of these discussions came the decision that the President should make what has turned out so far to be his only major speech on the Arab-Israeli conflict. A speech that basically tried to put the United States back in a position of leadership at a time of great turmoil in the Middle East.

"On September 1, 1982 the President gave what I consider to be an extremely balanced, sensible speech," said Quandt. "No one will agree with every sentence in it. But as a statement of American principle, commitment to peace, a reiteration of the need to move toward peace through negotiations based on the underlying principles embodied in UN Resolution 242, it was a fine statement. And one can see the craftsmanship that Bob Ames had helped to bring to that—a sense of balance that someone earlier had said, 'this was not a man who had any animus toward any of the parties in the Middle East.' He was the epitome of fair-mindedness and even-handedness."

Quandt recalled that he saw Ames frequently during this period. "I was surprised to see how optimistic Bob was about the prospects for getting the peace process started," he said. "I was still stunned by the whole disaster in Lebanon and was quite pessimistic about where that would leave us in the Middle East given a sense of widespread belief in the Arab world about collusion in the war in Lebanon with Israel. Bob had a remarkable streak of idealism in him—a belief that things need not always end in disaster."

Although he senses a "great deal of hopefulness" on the part of Bob Ames, Quandt explained that the Reagan initiative of September 1982 remained little more than a fine speech. "There was no strategy to follow through," he recalled. "The events threw us off course. Lebanon, instead of being on its way toward healing, in fact was just on the verge of a more tragic turn toward violence. And as the situation in Lebanon deteriorated, we found it difficult to maintain momentum behind a move toward peace."

Then in April, 1983 came the bombing of the Embassy and the death of Bob Ames. "I think we also lost an individual who might have tried to help guide the efforts in the continuing search for peace in the Middle East," added Quandt.

Shireen Hunter, a former Iranian diplomat who is now a senior fellow at the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies, discussed "The Iran-Iraq War and its Implications for U.S. Interests." Recalling Ames, she said, "In the short period of time I got to know him I was highly impressed by his clarity of mind, but most importantly the objective and unemotional way he approached the Middle East which is a highly-charged and emotional place."

"I was a colleague and friend of Bob Ames for many years," said Graham Fuller, vice chairman of the National Intelligence Council during his presentation. "I had immense respect for him. I was terribly impressed with his ability to deal with an extraordinary variety of people and types from the Middle East and was equally at home with all of them. I think he came to enjoy their respect and trust. That's a difficult trick. Bob did it very well."

Fuller discussed "The Soviet Union in the Middle East" during the symposium. Other Middle Eastern experts and policy-makers who participated were Harold Saunders, former assistant secretary of state for the Near East and South Asia who is now a senior fellow at The American Enterprise Institute ("U.S. Policy in the Middle East Since Camp David"); Robert Hunter, a former National Security Council member who is now a senior fellow at the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies ("Europe and the Middle East"); Daniel Pipes, former professor of strategy at The Naval War College who is now director of the Foreign Policy Research Institute ("Syria as the Pivot for State-Sponsored Terrorism in the Middle East"), and David Long, of the Office of Counter Terrorism, U.S. Department of State ("The Concept of Terrorism").

The event was sponsored by La Salle's Alumni Office and Political Science Department. Edward A. Turzanski, '81, the university's associate director of alumni, was the symposium director. Frank Blatcher, '56, a teammate, classmate, and close friend of Ames, was toastmaster at the dinner.

A Colleague Remembers:

A Terribly Energetic Person with Fond Memories of La Salle

Among the friends and colleagues of Ames who spent the day on campus was Martha Kessler who worked with Bob in the office of the National Intelligence Council in a policy support role during the Carter and Reagan administrations. In an interview before the dinner, she reminisced about their work as a team, his memories of La Salle, and hopes for the future. (Bob was killed just one year before he would have been eligible to retire.) Her thoughts:

"He was a terribly energetic person, always doing five times as much as anyone else. He was a very unique person within the agency in that he had a way of being able to deal with all sorts of people extremely well. Virtually everyone who worked with him, for him, or for whom he worked had a great deal of respect for his competence in the area, his dedication to public service, his straightforwardness. He would not equivocate on issues. If he did not know or did not have an answer well enough thought out, he would tell you. He was confident enough to do that so he elicited an enormous amount of respect."

Ames often talked about his days at La Salle.

"Bob obviously had very fond, warm memories of his four years here. He did tell me at one point that he learned to operate under a lot of stress and had gained a lot of poise as an athlete. I think that experience helped him a great deal in his career. He wasn't intimidated by stressful situations which many young people are when they go into our profession. I think he had an enormous amount of poise which allowed him to feel very comfortable in a foreign culture, very comfortable in the Oval Office, very comfortable giving sworn testimony in front of Congressional Committees. That's an enormous asset. And I think that he probably gained a lot of that here at La Salle.

"I think that Bob had the sense that he had come to a certain mastery of his profession and probably would have enjoyed another challenge. (But) I always had the feeling that if the director of the agency or some other high level official in the U.S. Government asked him to take a special job, he would have done so because he was a very dedicated public servant. There was certain versatility to his talents. It wasn't just that he was a 'Middle East expert,' whatever. There was a sense that he was a very good manager, that he was an extremely articulate person, that he could grasp a problem quickly. He was an idea man."

A "Woman of Distinction"

Caryn Musil has been in the forefront of perhaps the most dramatic transformation in La Salle's history

By Rosalie Lombardo

Caryn Musil has been the driving force behind La Salle's Women's Studies Program.

In 1970, women students were first admitted to La Salle College. The following year Caryn McTighe Musil, associate professor of English, began her teaching career at La Salle. It was soon evident that these two events would become uniquely intertwined, facilitating many important changes at this once all male institution.

After teaching for a year at Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis, and holding a master's degree in English from Northwestern University, Musil was hired to teach in La Salle's English Department. At the time she was one of a handful of female faculty members and the only female member of the department's full-time faculty.

During her first year at La Salle Musil spent much of her time teaching, and working on her dissertation. But almost from the start she found herself involved in the University's transition to a coed college.

"I think for many of us, in particular those of us who identified ourselves as feminists, it was a very exciting place to be because it had just gone coed," Musil explained. "We knew that we were part of a very dramatic transformation at the institution, and chose to be really involved with the students during that time.

"It was very clear that there was a lot of work that was needed to be done in order to give the students the full message that we, as an educational institution, were ready to think differently because things were different and we couldn't do things in exactly the same way."

For the past 16 years, Musil has helped to incorporate many changes. She was the driving force behind La Salle's Women's Studies Program as well as the creation of the Building Blocks Day Care Development Center. She supported and worked for women's concerns as well as issues of peace and social justice both on and off campus. And through it all she continued to be a popular, highly respected teacher who has been honored with several prestigious awards.

In 1973 Musil and Judith Newton, an associate professor of English, team taught the first Women's Studies Course. It was the beginning of a program that was to become an integral part of the curriculum for women at La Salle. Today, 14 years later, Women's Studies is officially offered as a minor and continues to thrive as a course of study.

"I feel very proud of being a moving force in having a Women's Studies program put into place," said Musil, who served as the first coordinator of the program.

"The first Women's Studies course drew together some of these young women who by definition, were gutsier and riskier because there were so few of them. They decided they wanted to come to La Salle and break with tradition. It turned out to be the hard core that worked in so many areas to change the place."

Musil also takes great pride in the Building Blocks Child Development Center. In the fall of 1973 she and English professor Barbara Millard set out to find a location for a day care center that would serve La Salle's growing female population. They found their answer in the Church of the Redeemer adjacent to the campus. With seed money from the university, Building Blocks was born.

"I'm very proud of La Salle for risking it," she said. "They were really in the forefront of universities, especially Catholic universities, in making that kind of commitment to child care. In trying to incorporate women, you have to have a place to incorporate women's families."

Musil served as president of the Building Blocks Corporation from 1975 to 1982 during which time her two daughters also attended the center. Today Building Blocks is housed on La Salle's campus and continues to be a viable institution serving La Salle and the community. Over 50 children attend the center including those of many faculty and students.

In addition to these projects, Musil has spent much of her time serving on various academic boards and committees. She has helped establish the publication of GENDERLINES, the only journal on campus for students' academic work, and the Professional Women of La Salle organization, a support group which discusses relevant issues and does long range planning. She has also been a long time supporter of the Continuing Education for Women (CEW) program at La Salle.

But not all of Musil's accomplishments are within the realm of the university. Last year she was named one of ten "Pennsylvania Women of Distinction" by the Pennsylvania Women's Campaign Fund and she has recently been selected as a 1987 Commonwealth Speaker by the Humanities Council. As such, she will speak throughout Pennsylvania on "Women and World War II—Bombing the Trenched and the Entrenched," and "Women's Studies: Seeing the World Anew."

Perhaps the most distinctive of her accomplishments is her selection in 1984 as the National Coordinator of the National Women's Studies Association (NWSA), a professional association of some 2,800 feminist educators in colleges and universities across the United States.

Until this year she filled that position on a part-time basis while keeping her teaching duties at La Salle. Beginning in the Fall, Musil will assume the position full-time and take a leave of absence from La Salle for one year.

"When I began teaching Women's Studies courses I was not only an English teacher but a Women's Studies teacher, too," she recalled. "That made me hungry for professional places where I could present my work and scholarship, talk about the new courses I was teaching, about the dilemma of a feminist teacher in a non-feminist or non-women's studies course."

Musil said she was thrilled to find an organization like NWSA that combined all of her academic and teaching interests.

"It's been very important to my professional growth and psychic health," she explained.

"La Salle has always been very supportive of my role in NWSA and I'm grateful of that. I feel very proud of La Salle and all that has happened, and proud of my contribution to that. I have a deep commitment to La Salle."

Musil expects to return to teaching someday.

"But I've been in the classroom for 16 years, this gives me the chance to do something different. I felt that if I wanted to grow, I had to make this move now."

The NIT Championship

After 35 years the Explorers made it back to the finals in Madison Square Garden

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

It was déjà vu for the Explorers and their long-suffering fans in 1986-87.

For the first time in 35 years—following a regular season that seemed to have ended in bitter disappointment, a La Salle basketball team made it back to the championship game of the National Invitation Tournament in New York's Madison Square Garden.

Then, after falling behind Southern Mississippi by eight points with less than a minute left, the Explorers fought back and actually had the ball and a chance to tie or win the title with 15 seconds left before the Golden Eagles held on for an 84-80 triumph and the first national championship in any sport for a college from the state of Mississippi.

And just like that magic moment in 1952, when a great freshman, Tom Gola, helped coach Ken Loeffler's Explorers roll past Seton Hall, St. John's, Duquesne, and Dayton to win the NIT, a La Salle team was again sparked by a freshman. This time it was Lionel Simmons, a 6-6 forward from South Philadelphia High School, who carried the Explorers to their fourth national championship appearance—a record, incidentally, unmatched by anyone else in the Big 5.

It was an astonishing climax to a roller-coaster of a season that saw first-year coach Speedy Morris lead the Explorers to a second place finish in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference and a 20-13 record against one of the toughest schedules in the nation that included two big wins at Villanova and near-upsets of North Carolina, DePaul, Temple, and Notre Dame. Then, after being shocked (and eliminated from NCAA Tournament consideration) by eventual league champion Fairfield, 75-62, in the first round of the MAC Tournament at the Meadowlands on February 28, La Salle's chances of getting into a post season tournament appeared very slim. But when the bids were announced for the 50th anniversary NIT, the Explorers were included.

"I thought our season was over," said Larry Koretz, the only senior in the starting lineup. "The whole team thought the season was over." "We were all but dead after the Fairfield game," added Tim Legler, the 6-4 junior swing man. "We were ready to go home for spring break. We came from the lowest point to the highest point of my career."

"If someone had told me at the beginning of the year that we'd have the second best record in the Big 5 and were going to the Final Four of the NIT, I'd have bought a new car," added Morris. "We've proved that the NIT committee was right in selecting us."

Simmons led the team with 20 points and 10 rebounds a game and set a new single season scoring record for a La Salle freshman with 670 points. He capped an incredible performance in the NIT with 34 points and 11 rebounds against Southern Mississippi and left many of the 12,742 fans in the Garden with the feeling that the wrong man had been named the tournament's Most Valuable Player. That honor went to Randolph Keys, who led the winners with 18 points.

"What can I say about Lionel that hasn't already been said," asked Morris at a New York press conference. "He's not a fancy player but he does everything well."

"He's remarkable," added assistant coach Joe Mihalich. "He was born to play basketball."

Simmons, who was named to the ESPN and United Press International All Freshman teams, drove the length of the court in the final six seconds to score the winning field goal in an 86-84 victory over Villanova in an NIT first round game at duPont Pavilion. Then in the following round, despite suffering a fractured nose late in the first half against Niagara in Buffalo Memorial Auditorium, the brilliant forward came back to score 14 of his 23 points and spark the 89-81 Explorer triumph. All five La Salle starters finished in double figures with Koretz scoring all of his 17 points after halftime. It was the first time since 1955 that the Explorers were able to win a second post-season game.

La Salle finally was given the opportunity to host an NIT game in the quarterfinals against Illinois State at the Palestra. It was no contest! With almost 6,000 fans roaring their approval, the Explorers led from the opening tap, played perhaps the best defensive game of the season, opened up a 32-22 halftime lead, and coasted to a 70-50 triumph. Simmons played without a protective mask over his fractured nose, scored 18 points and grabbed 15 rebounds.

"The crowd tonight was just unbelievable," said

La Salle's first-year coach Speedy Morris shouts encouragement in championship game against Southern Mississippi. Morris guided the Explorers to 20 victories this year using only six players most of the way.

Bill Raftery, '63 (right), co-captain of the 1962-63 Explorers who lost to St. Louis in the opening round of the NIT, shared play-by-play and color duties for this year's NIT with Howard David on national television.

When the season was over, Lionel Simmons stood all alone in the record books as the highest scoring freshman (670 points) in La Salle's colorful court history. He averaged 23.4 ppg. in the five NIT games and picked up 52 rebounds.

Legler, who would go on to finish the year with 616 points, making him and Simmons the first pair in La Salle's colorful court history to go over the 600 point mark in a single season. "We haven't had that kind of support in a long time. The whole place was rocking."

The Explorers were even more devastating against Arkansas-Little Rock in the semifinals at Madison Square Garden. La Salle's first four shots of the game were from 3-point range. By the time Koretz hit the first two, and then Tim Legler and Rich Tarr converted their outside shots, the Explorers were off to a 12-2 lead. It was 45-34 at halftime and Arkansas-Little Rock, a team that had eliminated Notre Dame in last year's NCAA Tournament, never got closer than nine points. Legler finished with 26 points. Tarr, who did an outstanding job all year at point guard, finished with a career-high 23. Simmons had 21.

And then the finals! With 30 bus loads of fans coming from La Salle, and hundreds of others traveling by automobile and train to Madison Square Garden, the Explorers squared-off against a Southern Mississippi team that had eliminated Mississippi, Vanderbilt, St. Louis, and Nebraska in earlier rounds of the NIT. The perimeter shots just weren't there, however. La Salle connected on only three of its first 18 shots, made only 28 of 70 for the game (four of 24 from 3-point range) and missed 12 field goal attempts in a row after coming back to take their only lead of the second half, at 44-43. Meanwhile, the Golden Eagles from Hattiesburg, an excellent "3-point team" all year, were 11 for 24 from that range.

"Give La Salle credit, though," said an ecstatic Mississippi Southern coach M.K. Turk. "They are extremely well-coached, well-drilled, and disciplined. Speedy Morris had them as prepared for this game as well as any team we faced all season. They gave us everything we could handle."

One of the interested spectators at the championship game was Gola, who was named co-MVP along with the late Norm Grekin after the 1952 NIT. Gola, of course, went on to become a three-time All America and lead the Explorers to the NCAA title in 1954 and NCAA runnerup to the Bill Russell-led San Francisco team the following season.

"This is a big night for the whole school," said Gola in an interview with Philadelphia Daily News columnist Ray Didinger. "It would have been great to win but I can't feel too bad. It's pretty obvious Speedy has the program on the right track. People in the city are talking about La Salle basketball again. I think the momentum will carry into next season. I give Speedy a heckuva lot of credit. He brought these kids back from a tough loss (against Fairfield) and they played their guts out in this tournament. They came up a little bit short tonight, that happens. The thing is, they carried themselves like winners. That's what people will remember."

Could the next few years be déjà vu for Lionel Simmons, the nation's best freshman scorer and rebounder, and the rest of the Explorers?

Richie Tarr, shown in action during 70-50 victory over Illinois State at the Palestra, finished a brilliant year as the Explorers' point guard by breaking the team's single-season assist record with 189.

Tim Legler, an Academic All America (honorable mention) and a member of the Metro Atlantic All Star Team, was also La Salle's best free throw shooter this year, converting more than 80 per cent of his attempts.

Larry Koretz gave the Explorers a big lift in the first two games of the NIT against Villanova and Niagara with 40 points. The only senior in La Salle's starting lineup, Koretz never missed a game during his four year career.

Craig Conlin scored 20 points including a crucial three point play late in the game to help the Explorers beat Niagara in the second round, then added 14 more in the quarterfinals against Illinois State.

AROUND CAMPUS

Drs. Zane Robinson Wolf (left) and Gloria Donnelly discuss courses to be offered in the university's new Master of Science in Nursing Program.

La Salle To Introduce Grad Nursing Program

La Salle University will offer a Master of Science in Nursing degree beginning in September, it was announced by the university's provost, Brother Emery Mollenhauer, F.S.C., Ph.D.

Courses in the Graduate Nursing Programs will be offered in late afternoons, evenings, and weekends on La Salle's main campus at 20th St. and Olney Ave.

Two Advanced Nurse Generalist tracks will be offered beginning in the fall—a clinician track in Adult Health and Illness and a role development track in Nursing Management Administration. A clinician track in Community Health will be available in September, 1988.

Dr. Gloria Donnelly, director of La Salle's Department of Nursing, said that the university's new graduate programs offer the nursing community of Philadelphia another set of options because they do not duplicate any of the courses already existing in other graduate programs in the area.

"La Salle's approach is to prepare advanced generalists who can quickly adapt to changing trends in health care dictated by an aging population with chronic illness problems," she explained, "nurse generalists who will enhance the effectiveness of nursing care as managers/administrators and as clinicians in a variety of settings."

Health care manpower experts are predicting a severe nursing shortage in the next few years. Therefore, there will be greater demands on programs like La Salle's to provide nurse generalists who can provide broader, more diverse, and cost-effective health care services.

Dr. Donnelly pointed out that students in La Salle's Graduate Nursing Programs will also have the option of taking some of their elective courses in the university's other Graduate Schools. Nurses interested in working with specific ethnic groups, for example, will be able to study in La Salle's Bilingual/Bicultural Studies (Spanish) Program.

La Salle's Department of Nursing was initiated in 1980 when the University introduced a part-time Bachelor of Science Degree program for registered nurses. Since then, nearly 300 graduates have been prepared by the program which is accredited by the National League for Nursing.

Dr. Zane Robinson Wolf, an associate professor of nursing at La Salle, will be coordinator of the university's Graduate Nursing Programs. Applications are available from the university's Evening Division office (215-951-1234).

Plans Underway For 125th Anniversary

In 1988, La Salle will celebrate its 125th anniversary at a time when a number of historic events are "coming together" at the University—the enlarged physical campus itself, the restoration of the Belfield farm and the Peale estate, the revised curriculum, and the construction of the new library.

For the purpose of arranging a fitting observance during the academic year from September, 1987 to May, 1988, Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., has appointed an ad hoc committee drawn from all segments of the campus community and chaired by Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., President Emeritus, and has charged it to:

- define the themes and focus of the observance
- arrange a calendar of events, with emphasis on the regular occasions of the academic year, the Fall Convocation, Parent's Day, Open House, Signum Fidei Dinner, Charter Day, Commencement, Homecoming, and so forth
- relate the program, whenever feasible, to other occasions during the year, the anniversary of the U.S. Constitution, the renovation of the historic Belfield farm, the dedication of the new university Library, and so forth.

The committee has begun its meetings and is now seeking suggestions from all areas of the campus for developing regular occasions of the year within the framework of the anniversary, as well as presenting those special occasions which will highlight La Salle's accomplishments during its 125 year history.

For example, the History and Political Science departments are planning a panel on "The Containment Policy after Forty Years" in November; the English department, in collaboration with Yale University Press and the Smithsonian Institution, will host a conference at Belfield on Charles Willson Peale and William Wordsworth in October.

The anniversary will also be a good time for reunions of department alumni, students and their parents. Several related departments are planning to hold individual meetings and follow them with receptions on campus. Student representatives on the committee are discussing ways to make the annual Open House a very special occasion and the Student Affairs area is giving thought to ceremonies like the Opening Mass and Commencement. On March 20, 1988, the entire University will celebrate its 125th Charter Day.

An exhibition on the history of the University, a concert by the Curtis Institute Orchestra, and special publicity programs have also been proposed.

By mid summer, the Committee plans to publish a comprehensive calendar of events that will take place throughout the 125th anniversary year.

Montgomery Appointed Annual Fund Assistant

Richard D. Montgomery has been appointed assistant director of the Annual Fund.

A graduate of Rutgers University and a native of N.J., he served as newsletter coordinator and public relations assistant for Rutgers' Department of Health Education. While working there, he targeted information to the diversified Camden and Newark campuses.

Last spring, Montgomery participated in the Johnson and Johnson public relations mentor program on the revitalization project "New Brunswick Tomorrow."

Juan Uribe with his "Thank You Note" in the Roland Holroyd Science Center.

Student From Central America Offers Artistic Gratitude

It's a long way from Central America to Philadelphia, but Juan Uribe is glad that he made the trip to become La Salle University's first foreign student to major in geology.

The 24-year-old native of Colombia is so appreciative of the education he received at the Christian Brothers' institution that he has literally painted a "thank you note" on the walls of La Salle's Roland Holroyd Science Center on its 20th St. and Olney Ave. campus.

Uribe, who will graduate in May with a bachelor of arts degree, recently completed a colorful 14 foot by 6 foot mural on a large wall in the classroom/laboratory area of La Salle's Geology Department on the lower level of the university's Science Building.

The mural, which took a little more than a year to complete, vividly depicts life from the time of dinosaurs and primitive man and illustrates the relationship of life to the universe from a scientific standpoint.

"I tried to approach it from the point of view of being a science student and also from the viewpoint of an artist translating life," explained Uribe, who had done some watercolors and oil paintings in the past, "but never anything as challenging as this."

Uribe says that he started thinking about the mural during his freshman year.

"I wanted to do something for the Geology Department," he recalled. "The experience at La Salle was great. My friends on campus and my professors always encouraged me. They always gave me advice and support. I think that I accomplished a lot here."

Uribe says there's another reason why he painted the mural.

"It's nice to show people that we have a good Geology Department," he added. "Maybe this will help the department get noticed more. Maybe this will open the door for more students to look into geology. And I think it's nice for people to know that Colombia was here!"

Uribe, one of five children of a Colombian businessman, expects to study petroleum geology at a midwestern graduate school before returning to settle down in his hometown of Medellin, a city of 2 million in a nation desperately in need of geologists who can speak two languages.

It was the desire to study a second language that brought Uribe to Philadelphia in the first place. He attended an English language program at Temple University and had been accepted into that institution as a geology major.

"But a friend showed me La Salle and I really liked its campus and its Geology program," he recalled. "La Salle struck me as a nice place to study. I had only planned to stay in the United States for three or four months to learn the English language."

"But I liked the city and its people. Besides, La Salle is a good place to be. I learned a lot."

Accounting Alumni Create Endowed Chair

With the inception of Phase II of La Salle's Campaign for the 80's in the Fall of 1985, a core group of Accounting Department alumni—chaired by Richard L. Duszak, '63, and Joseph G. Markmann, '49—launched a unique fund raising campaign designed to establish the university's fully-endowed chair within the Accounting Department.

Through a combination of individual contributions and corporate matching gifts, the endowed chair will provide a permanent source of financial support for the Accounting Department, will encourage curriculum development, research and publication by the faculty member who will occupy the chair, and will significantly enhance the academic quality and reputation of the Department's undergraduate and graduate programs.

To date, total gifts, grants and pledges to the endowed chair project exceed $120,000. Substantial support for the project by La Salle alumni employed by major public accounting firms, particularly Peat, Marwick and Mitchell, Arthur Andersen, Coopers and Lybrand, and Price-Waterhouse, has contributed to its initial success.

With more than $120,000 already committed, the endowed chair project is well on its way to achieving its goals of $250,000 by December 31, 1988 and $750,000 by December 31, 1997. Anyone interested in contributing to the endowed chair in Accounting should contact Joseph G. Markmann, chairman, Accounting Department (215-951-1025), or Dr. Fred J. Foley, Jr., vice president for development, La Salle University, Philadelphia, PA 19141 (215-951-1540).

Music Theatre Slates "Annie Get Your Gun"

La Salle Music Theatre will present a revival of one of its earliest successes, the Irving Berlin classic, Annie Get Your Gun, this summer from July 8 through August 3 in the Dan Rodden Theatre, on campus at 20th st. and Olney ave.

Brother Gene Graham, producer and director of Music Theatre, also announced a new production schedule for 1987.

Because of popular demand, a new Sunday matinee will replace the second show on Saturday evenings. Curtain times will now be at 8:00 P.M. Wednesdays through Saturdays with two shows on Sundays at 3:00 and 7:00 P.M.

Starring in Annie Get Your Gun, which was first produced on the La Salle stage during its inaugural season in 1962, will be veteran Music Theatre performers Colleen Durkin and Dan Schiff.

Durkin, who is best remembered for her hilarious portrayal of "Agnes Gooch" in the 1980 La Salle Music Theatre production of Mome, will have the starring role as "Annie," who was portrayed so triumphantly by Ethel Merman on Broadway in 1946.

Schiff, who last starred in the 1983 La Salle Music Theatre production of Bells Are Ringing, will portray "Frank Butler." Since appearing at La Salle, he has been featured in a number of professional roles including touring shows of Forbidden Broadway and Do Black Leather Shows Really Reflect Up?

Annie Get Your Gun, which features one of the richest stories and scores in the history of American musical theatre, includes such classic hits as "There's No Business Like Show Business," "Anything You Can Do," "They Say It's Wonderful," "The Girl That I Marry," and "I Got The Sun in the Morning."

Special group rates are available. For reservations and further information, call the La Salle Music Theatre box office at 951-1410.

Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., the chairman of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities, recently presented the association's highest honor, the distinguished service award, to Edward Donley, chairman and chief executive officer of Air Products, Inc., of Allentown, and chairman of the Business-Higher Education Forum.

Bill Wilkinson (center), who retired after 17 years as soccer coach of the Explorers, was honored at halftime of the La Salle-Fairfield basketball game at the Palestra on February 13. Here he receives a gift from Jay Williams (left), assistant commissioner of the Metro Athletic Conference as Bob Mullen, La Salle's athletic director, watches. Wilkinson's teams had an overall record of 142-97-29 and won four conference championships.

Alumni Annual Fund Nears $1 Million Goal

Two thirds—or nearly $700,000—of the ambitious one million dollar goal for the 1986-87 Alumni Annual Fund has been realized thus far. Additionally, alumni pledges outstanding total $128,000.

In reminding alumni of the 1987 fiscal year ending on June 30, Lawrence E. McAlee, Esq., '59, Alumni Annual Fund chairman, said that he is "hopeful that those fellow alumni who have not fulfilled their pledge or who have not yet contributed, will do so as soon as possible."

Last year's goal of $700,000 was surpassed by $245,000, thus achieving a total of $945,000.

McAlee thanked the "many alumni and student phonautones who have worked tirelessly since September to help reach our goal—a goal which is within reach. Furthermore, as we approach the University's 125th year it will be an overwhelming success story for our alumni when we achieve the one million dollar goal, a first in La Salle's history."

Track Alumni Plan All Weather Track

For the past two years, a dedicated group of alumni and friends of La Salle's varsity track program has spearheaded a very special fund raising campaign to generate revenue for a new all-weather track.

To-date, more than $26,000 has been raised for the track, approximately 35% of the $75,000 goal. A comprehensive site survey is in progress, appropriate consultants and architects have been selected, and the hope is that the new track will be completed for intercollegiate competition during the 1987-88 academic year.

Anyone interested in contributing to the construction of the all-weather track should contact Dr. James J. O'Neill, 277 Keswick Avenue, Glenside, PA 19038 (telephone: 215-576-7789).

EVERY COLLEGE STUDENT DESERVES THE SAME COMMITMENT WE MADE TO YOU.

We don't have to tell you about the LaSallian commitment to teaching and to the individual student. You experienced it firsthand.

Now it may be time to think about the right college for your children. Or a relative. Or the child of a friend. You should know, then, that our commitment is as strong as ever. And with higher education under attack for everything from abandoning its teaching mission to fostering an impersonal view of students, that commitment is one of our greatest strengths.

If you know someone who would benefit from the La Salle experience, please fill out the coupon below and send it to the Admissions Office, La Salle University, Philadelphia, PA 19141. Or call Brother Gerald Fitzgerald at 215-951-1500.

THE HONORS PROGRAM

For 25 years, La Salle has been quietly turning out some of the top scholars in the nation

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr.

Back in the 1960s, Jim Butler, a brilliant, young honors student at La Salle, did a paper on the contemporary poet Ferlinghetti and sent it off to Renascence, a highly-respected journal. The editors wrote back saying, "... Dear Professor Butler ... We should like to publish your article, but you haven't given us your academic rank or the origin of your degrees. We need this information to accompany your article before we can publish it. ..." Butler went to one of his English professors, Brother Patrick Ellis, who had just taken over as director of La Salle's Honors Center. "He said

"What shall I do?" " recalls Brother Patrick, who is now the president of La Salle. "Tell them the plain truth," I replied. "They'd be too embarrassed not to publish it. Furthermore, that will be a great thing in your fellowship application."

Butler told the truth, won Danforth and Woodrow Wilson Fellowships, and solidified his reputation as one of the most talented pioneers in La Salle's Honors Program. Today, Dr. James A. Butler is the chairman of La Salle University's English Department.

La Salle's Honors Program, one of the most respected academic enterprises of its type in the nation, is commemorating its 25th birthday this year in fine style.

La Salle students are now turning down some of the best graduate schools

"In the 18 years I've been here, I am hard pressed to recall a class that was as universally as good in terms of academic outcomes as this one," said John Grady, the longtime director of the program. "Our students are doing very well, thank you. In fact, in many cases they have been absolutely spectacular."

Sitting in his office in the lower level of McShain Hall, Grady reminisced about people like Jim Butler, '67, and listed some of the accomplishments of recent Honors Program graduates: Danforth, Truman, Fulbright, and Woodrow Wilson Scholars . . . Acceptances to Law Schools like Harvard, Yale, Chicago, and Virginia . . . Johns Hopkins, Harvard, and the University of Pennsylvania Medical Schools . . . Fellowships to Dickinson, Columbia, Cornell, Stanford and Berkley. "Our students are now turning down some of the best schools," added Grady, "schools like Yale, Chicago, Notre Dame, and Duke."

Grady takes particular pleasure in talking about students like Sue Kennedy, '87, a graduate of Philadelphia's Northeast High School who scored a perfect (800) on her Graduate Record Exam, finished in the 99th percentile in the Law School Admissions Test, and is headed to the University of Virginia's combined Law School and Graduate Program in Economics. Both of Kennedy's parents are dead. The youngest of four girls, Sue is the first to have completed college. "What she has accomplished—the jobs she worked just to pay her room and board, just to get through here—is absolutely incredible," says Grady.

La Salle's Honors Program is now recognized as one of the nation's finest. The Newsletter of the National Collegiate Honors Council, for example, has described it as "a very special sort not available to larger, general universities," and took note of a "really extraordinary record in terms of garnering Fulbright, Danforth, and Marshall scholarships."

Extraordinary to be sure. Men and women from La Salle have won just about every graduate award including a Harry Truman Scholarship, Marshall and Rotary International Fellowships, and National Science Foundation Grants. Some 39 La Salle graduates have been named Fulbright Scholars. During their lifetimes, La Salle students were awarded 24 Danforth or Woodrow Wilson Fellowships. According to a recent survey, La Salle ranked in the top 6 per cent among private undergraduate institutions originating Ph.D.'s (58th out of 943 colleges and universities).

Other statistics regarding La Salle graduates, most of them products of the Honors Program, are equally as impressive. According to a recent study covering a seven year period, 99 per cent of students who were highly recommended by La Salle were offered entry into medical schools including Temple, Jefferson, Hahnemann, Hershey, and The Medical College of Pennsylvania. Since 1965, each graduating class has averaged about 40 graduate and professional school fellowships, scholarships, and assistantships.

"Our (honors) students can hold their heads up second to none," says Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., the first full-time director of the program who ran it from 1964 until he was appointed director of development in 1969. Actually, the Honors Program at La Salle has only had three directors and two of them went on to become presidents of the university. Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., who got it off the ground in 1961-62, eventually became La Salle's academic vice president and served as president from 1969 to 1978. "We were one of the first," says Grady. "If Daniel Burke wasn't ahead of his time, he was certainly at the cutting edge." Grady, who succeeded Brother Patrick in 1969, has served in a number of leadership roles in the National Collegiate Honors Council. He conducts annual workshops and frequently consults other colleges and universities thinking about starting their own programs. Villanova's program, for example, is a "direct copy" of La Salle's. Grady has advised St. Joseph's University which is currently attempting to resurrect its program.

Brother Burke traces the actual planting of the seed for the Honors Program back to the late '50s, shortly after he joined La Salle's English Department as a young professor fresh out of the Ph.D. Program at The Catholic University and a teaching stint at Manhattan College.

"Maybe a year or so after I came in 1957, we started an Academic Development Committee," he recalled. "The general notion was to improve the academic spirit, the ambience, to make our programs more challenging. I'm not sure if a recommendation for an Honors Program came out of that committee, but if it didn't, it was in the spirit of the effort of that committee—something to raise the academic level of programs, to do something for a group that we obviously had, a group of especially talented students."

By 1962, Brother Burke was asking the Roster Office to divert obviously gifted students into special sections. A footnote for an English Department course actually appeared in the college's catalogues around that time that said: "This course is required to those invited to take it." Next, Brother Burke started inviting some of the most brilliant minds in academe to conduct special courses—people like Bucknell University President Dennis O'Brien, then an assistant dean at Princeton, and Helen North, of Swarthmore (Both of them, incidentally, are trustees of the university).

"My thoughts were simply to provide a little more competitive spirit among the students, themselves," says Brother Daniel. "Similarly, the hope in combining regular courses with the few honors courses was to combine the advantages of the democratic with a little sprinkling of the elitism."

Another objective was to get La Salle students into the "mainstream," to increase their visibility in the eyes of the graduate fellowship selection committees. It wasn't long before talented La Salle students started impressing these people, and the astonishing string of Danforth, Wilson, and Fulbright awards soon started rolling in. Very few colleges could match La Salle's success during the heyday of these programs that were designed to encourage the pursuit of the doctorate and careers in college teaching.

A number of Brother Burke's proteges have gone to impressive careers—people like Paul Betz, '61, chairman of English at Georgetown University, and Frank Battaglia, '63, an English professor at the City University of New York.

Brother Patrick Ellis, who was teaching at a Brothers' high school in Miami after spending a few years on La Salle's English Department faculty in the early '60s, was named the first full-time director of the Honors Program in April, 1964. A few months later, a Center was established in McShain Hall. Soon some of the brightest high school students in the area were headed for La Salle. Sections of required honors courses were instituted. Interdisciplinary concepts and team-taught courses began to appear. Special Topics courses were introduced featuring some of the most influential minds in the Delaware Valley—Murray Friedman, the recently-appointed vice chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights; E. Digby Baltzell, the eminent sociologist and scholar, and Thomas P. Gilhool, who is now Pennsylvania's Secretary of Education. Many of these courses are part of the institution's regular curriculum today. Faculty morale improved at La Salle as some of the top teachers found themselves earning double credit by handling the smaller, elite Honors sections. Fellowship and scholarship applicants were carefully cultivated.

Honors Program members complete 40 courses and 120 credit hours just like the regular students. Twelve of those courses, however, must be taken in the Honors Program in lieu of courses normally taken as part of the standard curriculum. Honors students, for example, must take between two and five of their religion and philosophy courses as part of the honors curriculum.

"The basic, most fundamental difference between honors courses and those offered in the regular curriculum concerns the capability and motivation of the students," explained Grady. "Honors classes are generally smaller (average size 13). Honors students have the same high motivation because they're in the program by choice. They haven't been forced into it. They want to be in that kind of setting."

There are still many brilliant students at La Salle who have chosen not to participate in the Honors Program. "It's not for everyone," says Suzanne Brooks, '75, one of the first women to go through the program. "I know some people on scholarship who are certainly qualified but have chosen not to be in the Honors Program," adds Ed Skorpinski, '87, a chemistry major at La Salle who will be studying for a combined M.D. and master's degree in public health in a unique five-year program at Johns Hopkins University. "I think they are missing something."

Skorpinski says that one of his classmates, a chemistry-mathematics major, felt that the Honors Program was "elitist," a charge that student members of the Honors Board have been grappling with for many years. "I don't know if it is deserved, I don't think it is," he says. "We do what we can to play down that image. When we planned social activities, we made an effort to open them to other people and encourage them to bring friends."

Honors Program courses are generally conducted seminar-fashion with most of the class time spent in discussion of the material that has been studied and analyzed in advance. "We are able to do things with content that would be very difficult to do in the regular curriculum," says Grady. "For example, we'll take two teachers like Dr. (Patricia B.) Haberstroh in English and Dr. (John P.) Rossi in History and have them team teach a course about the literary and historical aspects of early 20th century Ireland."

"Rarely was an honors course taught at the black board," recalls Mike Dennis, '87. "Most of them were conducted in the even-numbered (seminar) rooms in Olney Hall. I loved the fact that teachers would come in, sit down with you and get a good discussion going. It made it a much better, more personalized learning environment."

"The honors courses are much more broadly-based, more interesting, and more exciting," says Penny Hoskins, '87. "You are in a classroom with people majoring in all different fields and you get a lot of different perspectives, a much broader view, a much better understanding of the world around you."

Dorie Sitkoff, '87, who is headed for the University of Pennsylvania Medical School, majored in biology but found a "Language and the Mind" course taught by Dr. Marjorie Allen to be the most interesting. "She had us reading the writings and ideas of Noam Chomsky," recalls Sitkoff. "It was difficult because Chomsky is not that easy a writer to understand. The people in that class were really great. We had science people, English people, psychology people, sociology people. Everyone brought something to bear on the subject; everybody had different opinions. Each time I walked out of class I felt I had really come to understand the material on a much deeper level than when I had walked in."

Freshmen are strongly urged to take three of their five courses in the honors curriculum, preferably having their year-long courses in literature, philosophy, and history coordinated by each professor in such a way that at any given time they will be looking at a particular period in western civilization through the eyes of a philosopher, a historian, and someone in literature. Students call this course The Triple.

It is conceivable, therefore, that students could be studying 18th Century France by looking at the historical perspective of the French Revolution while reading Voltaire and Rousseau in philosophy and analyzing A Tale of Two Cities in literature. Students and teachers then meet as a group every Thursday afternoon. They may hear a discussion on 18th Century Music conducted by Dr. George Diehl, of the Fine Arts Department; attend a lecture on 18th Century Art in the 18th Century Room of La Salle's Art Museum, critique a film together, visit a historical site like a Fairmount Park Mansion or the Bryn Athen Cathedral, or do something really innovative and attend a "Renaissance Dinner" at the home of a professor.

"The heart of the program is still the academic experience in the classroom," says Grady. "But we also try to give students the opportunity to do things socially and do things of a service nature." Students chartered a bus on one recent Saturday and took 40 children from nearby St. Benedict's Parochial School to the Franklin Institute. They've sponsored Christmas parties for orphans, organized entertainment in La Salle's new campus cabaret/eatery, and held social events for members of the Honors Program, their friends, and guests. "They do these things without a lot of fanfare," adds Grady. "They don't make a big deal out of their charitable activities. They just go out and do them."

Grady is especially proud of the diversified character of the 220 students in the Honors Program. Members of the Class of 1987, for example, encompass the entire spectrum of professional and academic interest: Medicine, Law, Communications, Education, Computer Science, English, Political Science, and Business. They include the president and vice president of student government, the co-editors of the yearbook, the editor of the literary magazine, general manager of the campus radio station, captains of the women's tennis and men's soccer teams, about half of the members of the Jazz Band, and a few members of the Masque. More of the students today are women—a decade ago, they comprised 25% of the class; next year they will make up 60% of the freshmen, and the number of honors students majoring in business has increased from a handful ten years ago to 16 today. "As a business major, I found the program attractive," says Pauline Scalvino, '87, an accounting major headed for Harvard Law School. "I wasn't limited to the business side. I was able to see the humanities and even the sciences."

"Through the Honors Program we are bringing to campus not only students who are intellectually-gifted—and who come from as far away as Minnesota—but also people who are very active members of the community," said Grady. Moreover, he added, "People think that all of our students come from schools like La Salle High and Malvern. Most of them come from Philadelphia schools like Cardinal Dougherty, George Washington, Northeast Catholic, Father Judge, Little Flower, and St. Huberts. It's an Honors Program for the working class."

Many non-traditional students have enjoyed considerable success in La Salle's Honors Program. They include women like Suzanne Brooks, a former Philadelphia policewoman who retired from the force and enrolled at La Salle after suffering a back injury. The first La Salle student permitted to do an independent research project in creative writing, she won a Danforth Fellowship and went on to earn her master's degree in English at Washington State University. She is now a doctoral candidate and the affirmative action officer at Penn State University. Penny Hoskins, '87, a mother of a 10-year-old son and 5-year-old daughter, majored in philosophy after transferring to La Salle from Philadelphia Community College upon the recommendation of Dennis McGrath, '69, co-director of PCCP's Honors Program.

"One of the advantages of La Salle's Honors Program is that it sets the tone for the whole place," says Brother Patrick. "It's extremely rewarding for the teachers to have exhilarating experiences, it's good for faculty morale, and it's good for recruitment because honors students help put the place on the map. I think it's like a yeast—a program where the mind here the work is a little more rigorous and more searching” is stretched, where the work is a little more rigorous and more searching. Certainly a student who is very bright should, in all justice, be challenged if he or she is willing to be—and they are in our program.”

They certainly are. So much, in fact, that a number of graduates claim that it is tougher to get a good cumulative grade-point average with honors courses. There's a perception, many of the former students say, that if you can handle the heavier (Honors Program) workload, you can be assured of getting nothing worse than a “B” or “C,” although it is extremely difficult to earn an “A.”

“The courses are more difficult,” says Pauline Scalvino. “There's more work, more papers, and more reading. But you can really enlarge on what you know. And everyone in the Honors Program is there voluntarily.”

“It was tough getting used to,” recalled Jack Rilling, '87. “Coming from a place like La Salle High, I had a hard time with the amount of work that was demanded of you, especially the first three years in the core courses like English, philosophy, and economics. It wasn't just demanding work-wise—the amount of physical paperwork—but thinking-wise. I was turned off at first because it seemed like I was pouring all this work into it and my grades were coming out lower than friends of mine who took English 101.”

Rilling always considered himself a good writer. “All of a sudden I had Dr. (Marjorie) Allen who, herself, is an excellent writer. She was shredding me to bits. Friends of mine who I knew I wrote better than, were getting “A's” with no problem in English Composition courses. I was a little disenchanted at first, but the further I got along, I began to enjoy it. I began to become aware what the whole purpose of it was.”

Rilling says that one of his most valuable and enjoyable honors experiences was an “Effective Communications” course taught by Brother John P. Dondero. “I had the same impression of this course that I had of the whole Honors Program in general—what is its purpose? I was very confused at first about what he was trying to drive at. But by the end, as soon as everything came together, it was crystal clear.”

“I remember the first critique I ever got from Claude Koch,” says Suzanne Brooks. “He looked through it all and said it was ‘crude.’ He ripped it to shreds and at the end he said, ‘But you do have a flair for the narrative,’ and you clung to that little word of praise.”

“My writing improved tremendously,” recalls Mike Dennis, a dual computer science/communications major who won an assistantship to Purdue University for graduate studies in advertising. “Papers had to be well-written for all of the Honors Program courses. Some of my communications courses were also very helpful along these lines.”

Dennis, who hopes to eventually specialize in creative aspects of advertising, says that he had a “terrific experience” with his independent study course under the direction of Dr. Mark Ratkus, an assistant professor of economics. The research needed for the project—analyzing Arbitron TV ratings, applying them to computer simulation, and attempting to forecast TV/Radio ratings prior to the broadcast—enabled Dennis to combine the study of statistics with his dual majors of computer science and communications. “I'm convinced that this project helped me to win a graduate assistantship because it demonstrated that I could do research,” he says.

Are students today more vocationally-oriented? “I don't think so,” says Grady. “The major reason why students came to La Salle or any university 15 years ago was to get a better job. And that's the same reason kids are here today. It's the nature of the job market that's different.”

Grady explained that careers in academe have been virtually closed for the past 10 or 12 years. Students who might have majored in philosophy or history and then attended graduate school have been forced to seek other careers. “Interestingly enough,” he added, pointing to the unusually high number of seniors who will be attending graduate, law, or medical schools, “more than half the class is going on full time for higher education. Now if this is vocationalism, than so was it vocationalism 20 years ago.” Although today's honors students don't seem as anxious to challenge you as their predecessors did 15 years ago—“They seem to be more intellectually complacent, somewhat more passive, somewhat more willing to accept the conventional wisdom”—Grady says that he finds them to be just as concerned, bright, and community-minded as they were a generation ago.

“I think that they have a much harder time concentrating today,” added Brother Patrick. “Most of them have come up through a far more distracting subculture.”

La Salle's president recalls that when he had the Honors Program 20 years ago, he assumed that the students were conversant with a fair amount of logic and philosophy, had at least an abstract knowledge of some religion, had read certain authors like Chaucer, had been exposed to MacBeth and, perhaps, a novel by Dickens.

“Now you can't assume any of that,” said La Salle's president. “But what you can now assume is a discursive way of being well-informed on the part of bright kids because of the electronic media and probably a greater awareness of the fine arts through the way they've come up. Also a greater awareness of how people feel—an alertness to perception and, certainly, a greater sophistication in the handling of data.”

“While they have tremendous gaps compared to what we used to expect as a matter of course, the fact is that they have strengths that we didn't use to have. Though these strengths are harder to build on, they're there.”

At any rate, says John Grady, “They are now and always have been an absolutely delightful group of people with which to work.”

George Washington and the Constitution

How helpful was our first president in shaping the document that created a nation? Historians have been debating this question for years

By Robert F. Jones, Ph.D., '56

Although at first glance, linking George Washington and the Constitution seems a penetrating glimpse of the obvious, it is legitimate to question how important the connection really is. Washington has never been credited with being a political philosopher such as James Madison, so how significant could he have been in the drafting of the document? Nor did he, except in the restricted manner of the pre-Revolutionary Virginia gentry, play the role of political activist as Madison and Alexander Hamilton did. So how significant could he have been during the ratification controversy? The answer to both of these questions has to be qualified and hedged about, for it is difficult to show a direct and significant contribution by George Washington to the Constitution itself or to its ratification. Yet James Monroe claimed in 1788 that Washington's "influence carried this government." Resolving the contradiction will be helped by a quick overview of the connections between the first president and the written frame of government.

There were direct contributions by Washington to the Constitution. In addition to serving as a delegate from Virginia, he was also president of the Convention. During the meeting, he spoke only once on a matter of detail, the minimum size of a district for the House of Representatives. During the ratification contest, he took a favorable position on the Constitution and maintained it unswervingly, permitting the fact of his approval and the reasons for it to be published by any newspaper which chose to do so. The expectation that he would serve as first president influenced positively both the delegates during the Convention, as well as the general public during the ratification contest. There was also his indirect contribution: his presence and his approval. With them, the movement to give the republic a stronger, more effective central government was itself significantly stronger. Without them, with Washington taking a passive attitude, it may have been fatally handicapped, and, had he been opposed, it would never have come about. Monroe exaggerated somewhat, but not too much, for the most important contribution George Washington made to the Constitution was to lend it his influence, his approval of it as a valuable and worthwhile change. As the most widely respected American of his day, this was an invaluable contribution, one that only he could make.

That contribution was first made possible in June 1775 when Washington was made commander in chief of the armies of the Continental Congress. By this, he became not only a general, but also a symbol of the unity of the colonies as they first resisted British policy and then fought for independence. This was a development which did not take years to mature; rather, it happened almost at once. Before Washington reached Cambridge in July to take command of the provincial militia besieging the British forces in Boston, he was the visible token of colonial unity. At the moment, British tyranny through the Royal Army directly threatened only the New England colonies, and the Yankees badly needed a sign of support from the Middle and Southern colonies. This symbolic role was increased both by the military circumstances of the War for Independence and the nature of the Congress's direction of that War.

Although the War was fought in a conventional European style for most of the major battles, its setting was anything but European. The vast area of the rebellious states, the lack of easy land transport, the shifting theatres of the conflict, all downgraded the importance of fixed posts and laid a premium on mobility, not a great strategic or supply center, not a government acting as a strong coordinator of resources and strategy. The British took and held Boston and Philadelphia for a winter. They took and held New York City from 1776 to the end of the War. None of these was of more than passing inconvenience to the American war effort, although each of the cities had economic and political importance. The American economy was too undeveloped to be seriously harmed by enemy possession of one or two points. Similarly, the political system was also undeveloped, with the overworked and underfinanced Continental Congress functioning more as an executive than as a legislature. Logistical support for the Army came as much from the separate states as from the Congress. Hence, there was no "capital" in either a political or an economic sense.

All this reinforced the tendency to look at Washington and the Army as the center of resistance. Further, the General's conduct during the War, especially his scrupulous respect for the Congress and reluctance to use the dictatorial powers given to him by that body during times of crisis further increased his moral stature as the leader of the cause. Finally, at the War's end, his resignation of his command, accompanied as it was by a promise never to resume public life, set aside fears of a military dictatorship. In a phenomenon rather rare in history, he ended the War more generally admired than at its beginning.

This reinforced Washington's status as the embodiment of the cause of American independence and nationhood, as the single most admired American public figure of his time. This status was a vital political asset and not lightly to be expended. Indeed, it was Washington's firm intention that it not be expended at all, that he remain a private figure in busy retirement at Mount Vernon.

But there were unsolved public issues or problems and Washington cared deeply about them. This concern had shown itself on a number of occasions during the War, especially when the Congress's lack of power had left the Army either unable to fight or severely handicapped in that task. In a 1780 private letter, he was especially strong in his criticism:

Certain I am, unless Congress speaks in a more decisive tone; unless they are vested with powers by the several States competent to the great purposes of war, or assume them as a matter of right; and they, and the States respectively act with more energy than they hitherto have done, that our cause is lost.

He repeated this criticism several times more during the War, most memorably in his last Circular to the States, July 1783, urging the strengthening of the Congress lest their new-found independence be lost. Although the Circular, promptly styled "Washington's Legacy," was widely reprinted and received a good deal of favorable public comment, state officials were almost uniformly hostile to the notion of diminishing their own power by increasing that of Congress. This official hostility did not change Washington's mind, for on the evening of December 22, 1783, the day before he resigned his commission, he attended a ball in his honor at Annapolis, Maryland, where the Congress was then sitting. After the requisite thirteen toasts had been drunk, the General was given the opportunity of offering his own: "Competent powers to Congress for general purposes."

Nothing happened between 1783 and 1787 to change Washington's mind that the Congress needed strengthening. Indeed, the lack of respect shown by various of the European powers toward the new republic, separatist feeling in the trans-Appalachian West, especially the South-West and the irresponsible economic policies of some of the states intensified the feeling. One of the most immediate influences on the convening of the Constitutional Convention was a much-misunderstood popular uprising in western Massachusetts. During the winter of 1786-87, a group of economically beleaguered farmers led by Daniel Shays stopped the courts from meeting and seemed ready to bring all government down around their ears. Once militia from eastern Massachusetts moved against them, the rebels quickly dispersed, but not before frightening observers throughout the country with visions of chaos and social upheaval. In September 1786, representatives of five states, meeting at Annapolis, had decided that a general meeting of all the states was needed to revise the present frame of union, the Articles of Confederation. Under the influence of Shay's Rebellion, the Congress agreed to call such a meeting for May 14, 1787 in Philadelphia. During the fuss over Shays' Rebellion, someone suggested to Washington that he use his "influence" to quiet the rebels. He pointedly replied that he did not know where that influence would be found, but if it could be, he was certain it was not the proper remedy. "Influence is no government," was his succinct reply.

However true that might have been, Washington did have influence, a great deal of it, and that influence was included in the plans of those who were working to make the Convention a success. But it was by no means certain that the General would attend. As much as he acknowledged the importance of the meeting—he had recently written that national affairs "seem to be drawing to some awful crisis"—he saw three barriers in his way: 1) the promise to retire from public life; 2) a concern that attaching his name to an ineffectual meeting would seriously diminish his reputation, a selfish consideration to be sure, but when one remembers that Washington saw his reward for public service not in monetary terms, but in the regard of his fellow citizens, an understandable one; 3) the Society of the Cincinnati. This was an hereditary society of Continental Army officers and Washington was the honorary grand marshal. Some civilians feared it as the germ of an American aristocracy and strongly objected to it. When the Society rejected some changes meant to allay these fears, Washington, who had supported the changes, decided to have as little to do with it as possible. But he kept his decision to himself, for he did not want to hurt the feelings of his former comrades in arms.

“Washington’s most significant contribution to the Constitution was the immeasurable effect of his influence on the American people of his generation”

The Society of the Cincinnati was holding a meeting in Philadelphia at the same time as the Convention. Before the call for the Convention had gone out, Washington had begged off from the meeting, citing rheumatism and the pressures of spring planting. How could he now insult the Cincinnati and attend the Convention? Those in Virginia and elsewhere who were working to bring about the Convention wisely let things stand a bit and allow the General to consider his own priorities. They also saw the possibility that not enough states might attend at Philadelphia and they did not want to expend their only tactical nuclear weapon on a drone, that is, Washington’s reputation at an unrepresentative meeting. Only on April 9, when enough states had appointed delegates to be certain of an adequate representation and when several of the Cincinnati Society had written their chief as to their understanding of the significance of the Convention, did Washington definitely agree to go to Philadelphia. Even then, the letter was filled with concern for his reputation should the meeting fail. Although he still had his fears, he wanted the Convention delegates to “adopt no temporizing expedient, but probe the defects of the constitution to the bottom and provide radical cures.” Even if these “radical cures” were not adopted, sooner or later they would have an influence. Everything should be risked, for everything seemed to be at risk.

Incidentally, Washington was not alone in his conviction that an “awful crisis” was impending. Many pressing national problems—the Indians, the British who still occupied military posts on American soil on the pretended excuse that the treaty of peace had not been fully executed, to name only two, were hanging fire because the Congress lacked the power to deal with them. But it must also be noted that the Congress was not the nation, that there was much prosperity to be found in the states and in those areas where there was distress, the future nevertheless looked bright. Further, in the agricultural economy of the late 18th century United States, farmers who complained about low prices for their crops still had food, shelter and a rough, but adequate existence. Many of the problems which Washington and others bemoaned were only potentially troublesome. Things which a great, free, powerful and independent nation ought not to tolerate, but more realistically, which the United States of 1787 might have to live with for a while. The success of the government set up by the Constitution has masked the possibility that a reformed Articles of Confederation, especially one which gave the Congress a source of revenue and effective control over commerce, could have been an adequate government for years to come.

Washington’s presence and approval was the most important contribution he made to the success of the Convention. While it may have been enough for him simply to attend and sign, his contribution was more than passive. On the first formal day of the meeting, Friday, May 25, he was elected president. This presiding role did not prevent him from taking an active role had he chosen to do so, for every morning the first formal motion made was to go into committee of the whole, which permitted freer and easier debate. On the motion’s adoption, the president stepped down and a chairman pro tem took over. Washington usually sat with the Virginia delegation but, as he had during his time in the Burgesses and the old Congress, said nothing from the floor. A few of the tallies taken within the Virginia delegation to decide how its vote would be cast survive and these show him consistently voting to strengthen the central government and the executive within that government. He voted for a single executive and against legislative election of the executive. He was on the losing side in voting against a motion to lower the legislative majority needed to override an executive veto from three-fourths to two-thirds. He made only one comment on a specific provision and that was when it was almost too late. On September 17, when the delegates expected only to sign the finished document and go home, Nathaniel Gorham of Massachusetts rose and asked for one further change, lowering the minimum size of an electoral district for the House of Representatives from 40,000 to 30,000. After he was supported by two other delegates, Washington spoke from the chair. Acknowledging the possible impropriety of his action, he supported the motion. The response was immediate and gratifying as the change was adopted unanimously. The final signing took place.

Although he spoke on only that one occasion, other than to conduct the proceedings, scholars generally agree that Washington influenced other details of the Constitution, especially those dealing with the Executive. Once it was decided that the office would be filled by one person, most expected it to be Washington, and some delegates acknowledged their readiness to sketch the office in broad outline only, leaving it to its first occupant to fill in between the lines. One example of this was when the number of terms the President could receive was left blank. Washington set the two term precedent when he retired in 1797, a precedent that was confirmed by Thomas Jefferson in 1809. Its work finished, the Convention sent the proposed frame of government on to New York City where the Congress was sitting for its action. While the ratification process was starting, Washington sent copies of the document to Virginia friends to build up some support for it. In identical cover letters, he stated his basic position on the Constitution, one he would not change during the controversy:

I wish the Constitution . . . which is offered had been made more perfect, but I sincerely believe it is the best that could be obtained at this time;

This article is adapted from remarks delivered by Dr. Jones (right) at a symposium on "The U.S. Constitution" on May 14 at Congress Hall, in Philadelphia. Michael Dillon, Ph.D. (left), an attorney and former member of La Salle's Political Science Department, and Wilfrido V. Villacorta, Ph.D., vice president for external relations at de La Salle University of Manila, the Philippines, also participated in the symposium, sponsored by the university's Alumni Association on the 200th anniversary of the day that President Washington called the Constitutional Convention into session. Because of a lack of quorum, the convention was adjourned until the following May 25.

and, as a constitutional door is opened for amendment hereafter, the adoption of it under the present circumstances of the Union is, in my opinion, desirable.

Thus, he would not argue particulars. Should one point or another be called objectionable, he pointed to the possibility of amendment, a step which he thought made unnecessary a second convention, one of the more plausible suggestions used by the Constitution's opponents to resist and possibly defeat it. He wrote widely throughout the states, asking for information on the contest's progress and giving the news from Virginia, one of the more closely contested states. These letters were frequently reprinted in the Federalist press to show the General's endorsement of the Constitution. The only time he objected to publication, his comment focused on the style and grammar of what he had expected to be an entirely personal letter; not the content. An understanding, usually left unvoiced, in the contest was that Washington would be the first president should the new form of government be approved. The General could not appear to be campaigning for the position and thus his refusal to argue particulars could have been a limiting device to keep him from doing more than would be proper under his own code as a Virginia gentleman.

The contest ended in New York in July 1788 when it ratified as the eleventh state by a three vote margin; Virginia had already ratified on June 25th. (Rhode Island and North Carolina delayed acting until the federal government had actually been formed.)

Thus, Washington's most significant contribution to the Constitution was the immeasurable effect of his influence on the American people of his generation. Our leading national figure, the person whom some seemed to think had brought about victory over the British singlehandedly, not only had to approve the work of strengthening the central government, but also help bring that work along more easily than a legion of adept political activists. The exact shape and form of the new government did not interest Washington very much; he confessed to Thomas Jefferson in 1788 that he was ready to accept "any tolerable compromise that was competent to save us from impending ruin." But only George Washington could have made a compromise tolerable to the differing sections, interests and classes of the United States of his time.

Dr. Jones, a history professor and former department chairman at Fordham University, is a highly-respected authority on George Washington.

Brothers from six different countries have come to La Salle to study, teach or do research. Although their nationalities vary, they've all found that same "La Sallian Spirit"

When Anthony Steel first stepped onto American soil in Los Angeles last winter, he was very tired and very scared. He had endured an extremely long plane ride from his native Australia with only one image of America, what he saw on TV shows like "Magnum P.I." and "Hawaii 5-O."

"I thought I would get mugged for sure, and that everyone in America carried guns," he explained. But Steel soon found that the United States can be very different from the TV shows he watched.

Brother Anthony Steel, a member of a small Australian religious order called the Brothers of St.

Gerard of Magella, was headed for the Philadelphia area, specifically La Salle University, to continue his studies. According to Brother Steel, "When I landed in Philadelphia and saw one of La Salle's Christian Brothers there waiting to pick me up, I knew it would be all right."

Brother Steel is just one of four religious brothers from different countries studying at La Salle this year. They hail from Australia, Israel, Mexico and the Philippines. Three are members of the Brothers of Christian Schools, the order that conducts La Salle. All of them are studying subjects, Religion, Psychology and Education, that will help them better pursue their future plans.

"I came here to get a masters degree in religion, to update my qualifications," said Brother Steel, a former assistant principal of Newman High School in Sydney. "I wanted to have time to reflect on where the Church is going, what new avenues the Church is following, and my response to that. I felt I needed the challenge of something more in depth, maybe in a culture other than my own."

After looking at several different American colleges and universities, Brother Steel settled upon La Salle because it best fulfilled his needs and those of his community. "I'm very impressed with La Salle," he said, "and with the quality of the professors, the quality of the courses, and the amount of information I can access."

"I've found my courses at La Salle both challenging and liberating. I've begun to see that there are lots of ways of thinking about Jesus that can complement the traditional formulas of faith."

When Brother Steel returns to Australia he hopes to continue his work at the high school for 898 boys run by his Order. He also hopes to continue teaching and perhaps get involved in pastoral care in the school. But he'll take with him something other than his education.

"The spirit here is great," he said. "The brothers have welcomed me as one of the family, and really I am not part of their community. But they have made me feel as one and that is important."

That feeling of being welcomed and part of the family was reiterated by each of the other brothers as well.

According to Brother David Kinneret, F.S.C., of Israel, "La Salle is very welcoming. Teachers are human beings. They accept you, discuss with you, and are ready to be helpful. They accompany the student in his or her achievement. I could have chosen a hundred other universities, even others run by the Christian Brothers, but La Salle is special to me."

Brother Kinneret is a native of Colombia with dual citizenship in Israel where he has served the Christian Brothers for nearly 20 years. His last assignment was as principal of the Brothers' High School in Jerusalem as well as director of the Christian Brothers there. His position with the Order also takes him to Lebanon and Jordan regularly.

At La Salle Brother Kinneret is studying religion and psychology. His goal is to return to Israel prepared to assume the role of Director of the Novitiate or Scholasticate. Brother Kinneret, who is fluent in seven languages, has found his courses at La Salle, "very challenging and interesting."

"La Salle is a very special place, not only intellectually, but through its services," he explained. "I know people who are helping the aged, visiting prisons, and so on. This is not always found at other universities. La Salle is a place where you live and get new experiences through service. It's not a closed society, it's an open, servicing society. This is important, this is fantastic."

From Vietnam: Where the Resources are Minimal . . .

In 1975, after the fall of Saigon, Brother Tri Nguyen, F.S.C., Ph.D., arrived in America as a Vietnamese refugee. He had spent many years working with the Christian Brothers in Vietnam serving as a teacher, director of the scholastics, and assistant to the provincial. With all that experience behind him he came to America prepared to start a new life.

After spending some time in the Indiantown Gap refugee camp, Brother Tri took a teaching position at La Salle High School for two years. He enjoyed teaching there, but wanted to continue his studies with the hope of teaching on the college level as he had done in Vietnam.

"I always liked to be in touch with young people and teaching forces me to keep on reading and keep up to date," he explained.

He attended the University of Wisconsin, Madison, to work on his doctorate in Sociology. Then he went on to complete post doctorate work at Cornell University. He also attended the Center for the Advanced Studies of Behavioral Sciences at Stanford.

In 1984 he returned to the Philadelphia area prepared to teach sociology at La Salle University, something he has found very satisfying.

According to Brother Tri, teaching sociology to American students can be very different from teaching students in Vietnam. "In Vietnam the resources are so minimal," he explained. "The thirst for knowledge is there, but they don't have time to read and broaden their knowledge. They rely on what the teacher tells them."

In addition to teaching, Brother Tri has established the American-Asian club on campus which promotes inter-cultural understanding. In its first year the club boasts nearly 25 members. He also spends time writing articles and working on the Christian Brothers Spirituality Seminars. He hopes to do some research in the future.

But for now teaching is taking up most of his time and he is happy for this opportunity at La Salle. "I see La Salle as very dynamic, with everyone looking to the future," Brother Tri concluded. "I see very qualified faculty in their fields, and I appreciate the friendliness of the people, faculty, and students alike. And the brothers are very impressive. I feel it is a privilege to live with them . . . there is a large 'basket of experience' here to dip into."

It is not a closed society, it's an open, servicing society

"There's a spirit here, and that's what makes La Salle different," said Brother Fermin Martinez of Morrellis, Mexico. "I think the environment helps you to appreciate other people and to stimulate each other. This is important in life."

Brother Martinez is studying Religion and English at La Salle. Upon completion of his studies, the former principal of an elementary school (Instituto Regio Montano) in Monterey, will go to Japan permanently as a missionary for the Christian Brothers. There he will teach high school Religion and English.

"Here I'm learning there are some things you can find new everytime you read the Bible. The students are receptive and the teachers are very good," he commented. Although Brother Martinez has found his coursework at La Salle stimulating he especially sees his time here as a bridge of sorts.

"This experience at La Salle is like a synthesis. This environment has helped me grow as a person and understand how Americans think about others. I was happy in Mexico then I moved to Philadelphia, and next year to Japan. This is kind of a bridge between my old and new lives."

Each of the brothers agreed that their experience at La Salle has helped them grow intellectually as well as spiritually. Brother Victor Franco of the Philippines was no exception.

Formerly the president of La Salle Boccolade, a Christian Brother's College in Manila, Brother Franco is studying in La Salle's Graduate Religion Program. "I've been in administrative work for many years and I want a change," he said. "I'd like to get into campus ministry work."

Before leaving the Philippines Brother Franco helped organize three groups of lay teachers and students interested in changing the social situation in the country. "Through this I'd like to establish a network of people in different careers who might find this network a way of being of service to the country," he explained.

His studies will help with this new challenge. "There is a good program here. Other brothers have come here and were very pleased. I am also.

"One of the things I find beautiful is an intangible, it's the La Salle spirit," he added. "I can see that the mission here is very much the same as the mission back home—we're trying to achieve the same goals. The circumstances are different, but the principals, the values are constant.

"Part of those values and principals are apparent in the way people treat people, that's the La Sallian spirit. It affects different people differently, but it affects them none-the-less."

As Brother Steel said, after he had the opportunity to settle into his niche at La Salle, "For a foreigner in a foreign country, it's terrifying enough. The fact that they take you in and make you feel so welcome is very, very important."

... To La Salle: With its Very Rich Academic Resources

Nigeria may be a long way from Philadelphia but La Salle University's reputation for excellence in education has transcended even that distance. According to Brother Anselm Uba, F.S.C., Ph.D., of Imo State Nigeria, the "very, very rich academic resources at La Salle" are what brought him here in April.

Brother Anselm, on sabbatical leave from his position as senior lecturer in counseling psychology at the University of Ife in Nigeria, is at La Salle doing research on the Listening Skills of the Counseling Process. His special interests border on the selective listening skills and cross cultural counseling.

"You have more facilities than we have in our country," said the author of three books and numerous published articles on psychology. "I'm particularly interested in two computerized career guidance systems here, Sigi Plus in the Counseling Center, and Discovery, in the Career Planning and Placement Department. The library has also been very helpful."

"The problem I will have is after I learn all these things, how do I implement them in my university? We don't have the machines you have here. I can only do my best, but the knowledge of acquiring the skills is still very useful."

While he is in Philadelphia Brother Anselm is taking advantage of other resources in the area as well. Along with Brother Arthur Bangs, F.S.C., Ph.D., of the Counseling Center, he has attended seminars at the Philadelphia Psychiatric Center and the Fairmount Institute of Psychiatry. He will also visit Lewis

College, in Illinois, Manhattan College, in New York, and his alma mater, the University of Toronto, for additional materials.

When Brother Anselm returns home to Nigeria in the Fall, he plans to continue collecting research materials. "I will blend it to Nigerian institutions," he explained. "And if possible I will publish a book from it. If that is not possible, the knowledge is not lost, I can use it for teaching there."

The Secretary's "Enforcer"

Tom Burke has never been one for frivolous conversation. But he certainly keeps things moving in the nation's largest agency

Thomas R. Burke, '60, at his office in the Hubert H. Humphrey Building, in Washington, where he serves as chief of staff to the Secretary of Health and Human Services

When President Reagan proposed a new health insurance program for catastrophic illness earlier this year, the event generated quite a few headlines and a "job well done" for a former La Salle economics major with a reputation for making things happen in the Department of Health and Human Services.

Thomas R. Burke, '60, the Department's chief of staff since December, 1985, worked with Health and Human Services Secretary Otis R. Bowen, M.D., to devise what has become known as the "Reagan Plan" for expanding Medicare to cover catastrophic illnesses for some 31 million elderly and disabled people.

The joint Bowen-Burke proposal was officially endorsed by the chief executive when the President included it in his 1987 State of the Union Address. For Burke, however, this was just another example of his "very unique experiences" as a government official. "I've been fortunate to be in the right place at the right time where the action is," he says.

Labeled by The New York Times as Dr. Bowen's "enforcer," Burke has developed a reputation for cutting through what one federal official calls the "normal bureaucratic inertia" to keep things moving in the agency with 130,000 employees and an annual budget of $348 billion, the largest in the federal government. "You have to know when to use the carrot, when to use the stick," says Burke in describing the most challenging aspect of his position.

Actually, Burke never really expected to wind up with the Federal Government where he has held key positions under the Carter and Reagan administrations. "I took economics at La Salle because I thought I was going to be a lawyer," he recalled during a recent interview in his spacious office in the Hubert H. Humphrey Building. "I went to graduate school (Boston College) because I thought I was going to be a professor."

Burke did teach—at Georgetown University from 1965 to 1968, then worked in private industry as a health economist. He also served as a senior health economist with the Economics Stabilization Program and as a staff member of President Nixon's Cost of Living Council. He joined the Department of Defense in 1975.

For the next seven years, Burke held a number of positions in the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs including deputy director for health planning and director of policy analysis. In 1982, shortly after leaving the Pentagon to join Health and Human Services, Burke took a leave of absence from his position as special assistant to the administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration to become Dr. Bowen's executive director after the former governor of Indiana was appointed chairman of President Reagan's Advisory Council on Social Security. Immediately, the soft-spoken, "country doctor" from the midwest and out-spoken, "Shanty Irishman" from Trenton hit it off. They combined their medical and economic expertise for a comprehensive report on medicare which was completed in 1984 and served as the basis for President Reagan's Catastrophic Health Insurance Proposal that is expected to receive Congressional approval this year. When Bowen was appointed HHS Secretary, he asked Burke to become his chief of staff.

Burke recalls inheriting an agency that was "virtually unmanageable" and working many 13 hour days and 80 hour weeks the first six months on the job. "The first thing we had to do was get good people in here," he says. "Except for one or two positions, every division head and all the senior staff are new. We had a sophisticated computer system installed and now I see daily departmental reports every morning before I read the Washington Post. I know everything that is going on immediately. Morale is way up in this agency, but you could have scraped it off the floor when we came in here."

"... Many Fine Memories ..."

Burke and his wife, the former Sharon Lee Bucs, have five children and live in nearby Alexandria, Va. Although he doesn't have a lot of spare time, Tom enjoys swimming and fishing. He also has many fine memories of La Salle. "I learned a lot at La Salle that has served me well," he says. "I got a good, solid education. I'm also a frustrated alumnus. I miss not being able to follow big-time basketball with the Explorers. I'd like to see us return to the NCAA glory days."

Catastrophic illness is not the only issue confronting the Department of Health and Human Services. The devastating implications of AIDS, of course, have been well-documented. "It's an awesome situation of epic proportions that has never confronted mankind before," says Burke. "It has the potential for wiping out a whole continent."

Then there's what Burke calls "the Aging of America," where the number of people over the age of 85 will quadruple in the next 25 years. "You'll have almost nine million people over that age," he explains, "and one million of them will be over 100-years-old. A person over 85 requires twice as much health care as a person who is 65. Who is going to pay for this? If we don't start (planning) now, we will be faced with a serious problem."

Since Catastrophic Health Care was first proposed—with predictable opposition and controversy, Burke has been the subject of considerable media attention—not all of it favorable—in such publications as The New York Times, Washington Post, and National Journal. He has been described as "harsh, brusque, insulting, even abusive." He has been accused of having "barrel-chested belligerence." Some of his subordinates have charged him with being "difficult, demanding, and opinionated." He has also been praised for being "exactly what you need in a chief of staff" by Dr. Carolyn K. Davis, who headed the Health Care Financing Administration in the early years of the Reagan Administration. As her top aide, she told The New York Times, Burke was "someone who can meet goals and deadlines without a great deal of frivolous conversation."

Burke, a former U.S. Army captain who describes himself as a "bottom-line person," claims that criticism does not bother him. "I have no tolerance for nonsense and procrastination. Sometimes feathers have to be ruffled," he said recently to a reporter. "You can't make an omelet without breaking eggs. To be sure I have enemies. But I couldn't do this job if I tried to make everybody my friend."

About The New York Times article, he says: "They basically quoted five people, four of whom I would hardly call friends. Only one, Carolyn Davis, would I list as in my column. But yet the article still came out, overall, accurate and favorable. The acid test is basically what you have on the scoreboard when you leave. And I think when we leave this agency, this secretary will go down as the best secretary the department ever had. We will have things on the scoreboard. We will have catastrophic insurance on the board. We will have a lot of other initiatives up there. We will have left a legacy that I think will carry on beyond us. That's the important thing, not whether or not they liked Tom Burke."

And how would Tom Burke like to be remembered after he leaves Washington?

"As the guy who got the job done," he says, "who got something up on the scoreboard."

FINALS

"The test of the student is not his ability to distinguish between words that are very similar," said La Salle's legendary late Biology Professor Emeritus Roland Holroyd. "The test is whether he has the information and can convey it to someone else."

Thousands of La Salle students again endured this ritual of "conveying information" last May, an exercise that is captured on these pages by the photographs of Martha Ledger.

Dr. Holroyd, whose distinguished career at La Salle spanned 50 years, used to say that there were two types of examinations—the subjective and the objectionable. He, of course, always disdained the latter (multiple choice) type and gave subjective (essay) examinations.

A native of England, Dr. Holroyd used to describe how European educators “raised their eyebrows” at the American custom of having one person teach the course, write the examination, mark the papers, and decide on grades. “This was like having a company treasurer keep the books, audit them, and certify his own balance sheet,” Holroyd added.

AROUND CAMPUS

Developer Willard G. Rouse, III, displays La Salle gift from Gregory O. Bruce, associate dean of business programs, after delivering keynote address at dinner commemorating 10th anniversary of university's M.B.A. Program.

MBA Program Celebrates Tenth Anniversary

For most people anniversaries mean a time for both celebration and reflection. They serve as an opportunity to consider the events of the past, evaluate the present, and look to the future.

At La Salle the 1986-87 year marked the 10th anniversary of the University's Masters of Business Administration Program. This event was celebrated on campus with a dinner on March 26 in the Union Building Ballroom. Developer Willard G. Rouse, III, delivered the keynote address and Dr. Joseph Kane, Ph.D., dean of the School of Business Administration was honored for his service as the first director of the MBA Program.

According to Gregory O. Bruce, associate dean of business programs, and director of the MBA Program, "It was very significant to celebrate this event. The very fact that we call ourselves a university is directly linked to the fact that we decided to start an MBA program. That was the flagship of the fleet of the other graduate programs that came after it. What the MBA enabled us to do was to bring in more quality students and faculty that may never have come here."

Since its inception in 1976, La Salle's MBA Program has graduated over 1,400 students, most of whom are working in the Delaware Valley and many of whom are in executive level positions.

The Program consists of a basic core and a management core in addition to nine specialization areas which include: Management, Accounting, Taxation, Marketing, Human Resources Management, Finance, Management Information Systems, Management Science, and Health Care Administration. These specializations provide the student with a professional level of competency in a chosen area and a more specific focus in contrast to the broader orientation of the core areas.

"What sets La Salle's program apart from the others is the attention to individual students," explained Dr. Kane, Director of the MBA Program from 1976 to 1981. "Our faculty is very concerned with individual students, just as in the undergraduate school. Our major emphasis has always been on the quality of our program and good faculty. We work to continue to evolve and reflect the business climate with regard to new regulations, concepts, and issues, etc."

La Salle's MBA graduates represent over 500 different business organizations. Most of these alumni are very successful in terms of salary, the positions they hold, and their promotions.

"As far as I'm concerned, our graduates are second to none," Bruce said. "We've been around ten years and I really feel that we are a very high quality program in this area. I think we're looking to get that recognized formally through the AACSB (American Assembly of College Schools of Business) accreditation of the business school.

"I look to the future for our influence to be more and more, and our prestige to grow," he continued. "With the quality of our teaching and the student experience here, once we gain accreditation there will be very few schools that can compete with us."

1,098 Earn Degrees at La Salle Commencement

A leading philanthropist and proponent of cultural appreciation in the United States, an internationally-known church historian, and the president of the William Penn Foundation were honored at La Salle University's 124th Commencement on Sunday (May 17) at Philadelphia's Civic Center-Convention Hall.

Leonore Annenberg, the wife of the former ambassador to the Court of St. James who has devoted most of her life to the enhancement of the fine arts; Jaroslav Pelikan, Sterling Professor of History at Yale University, and Bernard C. Watson, the chief executive officer of the William Penn Foundation, all received honorary doctor of humane letters degrees.

Mrs. Annenberg was sponsored by William J. Henrich, Jr., Esq., a member of the university's Board of Trustees. Dr. Pelikan's sponsor was Leo D. Rudnytzky, Ph.D., professor of German and Slavic Languages at La Salle, while Dr. Watson was sponsored by Fred J. Foley, Jr., Ph.D., vice president for development at La Salle.

La Salle University's Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., conferred bachelor's degrees on 882 men and women including 210 Evening Division students. Another 138 men and women received master's degrees in business administration; 24 were awarded master's degrees in religious education; 22 earned master's degrees in pastoral counseling; 18 received master's degrees in bilingual/bicultural studies (Spanish); and 14 others received master's degrees in education.

Mrs. Annenberg was honored for establishing "an enviable record of service in the enhancement of the quality of American life through the fine arts" and for her "energy, generosity, a consistent critical sense, and a sound philosophy of the public good."

She has been intimately involved in the operations of The Annenberg Fund, Inc., a private charitable foundation, and The Annenberg School of Communications, which were founded by her husband, Walter H. Annenberg. She was appointed Chief of Protocol of the United States in 1981 and is chairman of Friends of Art and Preservation in Embassies, a private, non-profit, non-partisan foundation established to assist the U.S. Department of State in the exhibition and preservation of fine and decorative art and furniture in U.S. Embassies, chanceries, and ambassadorial residences.

Mrs. Annenberg's Board memberships include The Metropolitan Museum of Art and The Philadelphia Orchestra Association. The Philadelphia

Museum of Art, and The Academy of Music of Philadelphia. She is advisory director of the Metropolitan Opera Association and past president and honorary trustee of The Palm Springs Desert Museum.

Dr. Pelikan, who has written a number of internationally-acclaimed scholarly works on all areas of Christianity, was described as "a charismatic lecturer, an inspiring teacher, and truly a modern day Renaissance Man" while being presented for his honorary degree.

"Our class of 1987 applauds your depth of scholarship, your vast historical perspective, and your animation by faith of your landmark works," said La Salle's Brother President Ellis during the presentation.

The author of the 1985 best-seller, Jesus through the Centuries, Pelikan has served as President Reagan's cultural ambassador to various international conferences. He is the former president of American Society of Church History and International Congress of Luther Research and the former vice president of American Academy of Arts and Sciences. Among other activities, he is fellow and counselor of The Medieval Academy of America and counselor of The American Philosophical Society.

Dr. Watson was honored for his "acute perception of the university as a corporate citizen while maintaining an understanding of the role of the liberal arts." He was also cited for his leadership of the William Penn Foundation where he has charted a course which has gained "national recognition for its commitment to the private, non-profit sector, particularly those social service, cultural, and educational institutions which are vital contributors to the quality of life in the Delaware Valley."

Dr. Watson has been a teacher, counselor, and principal in the public schools of Indiana, deputy superintendent of the School District of Philadelphia, and a professor and academic vice president at Temple University. He is the author of the book, In Spite of the System, as well as a number of monographs and articles.

A trustee or a board member of many organizations including the Public Interest Law Center of Philadelphia, Dr. Watson is senior vice chairman of the Board of the National Urban League and a member of the executive committee of the Board of the National Urban Coalition. He has served on a number of national educational advisory councils at the request of Presidents Johnson and Carter.

La Salle's annual U.S. Army Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC) commissioning ceremonies for 15 new officers was held on May 16 on the campus at 20th st. and Olney ave.

The university's annual Baccalaureate Mass was held on the same day at the Cathedral Basilica of SS Peter and Paul, 18th St. and Benjamin Franklin Parkway.

"Four Quarters" is Reborn at La Salle

"Little magazines" come and go. Mostly they go. Slim on advertising and short on subscribers, they publish an issue or two and go under.

It took 35 years, but Four Quarters, a little magazine published since 1951 by the faculty of La Salle University, almost followed the inevitable pattern, only to come back in a whole new format this year. The resurrected magazine featured an imposing array of name writers that included Alan Paton, James Merrill, and Joyce Carol Oates.

"I think we had reached the limits of our previous format," says English professor John Keenan, now beginning a second stint as editor. "I regret that we can't uncover new writers the way we sometimes did in the past, but we just don't have the resources to dig through 1,800 unsolicited manuscripts a year in the hope (sometimes mistaken) of finding a half-a-dozen good stories. The time has come to be more selective and assertive in going after the quality we want."

Keenan and his associate editor, history professor John P. Rossi, are doing just that. The publication schedule has been dropped from quarterly to bi-annually, but the number of pages has more than doubled. The funds gained from this maneuver have been plowed into paying better rates to contributors.

"We're now competitive with some pretty fair magazines, like The American Scholar and The Sewanee Review," Keenan says. "We can go after published authors of some reputation without feeling like beggars."

Volume I, Number I of the new series features South Africa's greatest author (Alan Paton), a Pulitzer Prize-winning poet (James Merrill), and one of America's finest and most versatile writers (Joyce Carol Oates). The three stories included are all by prize-winning authors who have been widely published (Claude Koch, T. Alan Broughton, and William Van Wert). The magazine also features contributions from retired Senator J.W. Fulbright and controversial historian John Lukacs.

"There is a lot of writing talent on the La Salle campus too," associate editor Rossi points out. "The first issue strikes a nice balance between local contributors and nationally-known names."

"Our next job is to build the subscription list up and then go after advertisers," adds Keenan. "But the important thing is that Four Quarters is alive again and getting stronger every day. When writers see this first issue, they'll be proud to be published here."

Subscriptions to the magazine can be obtained by sending a check ($13 for two years; $8 for one year) with your name and address to Four Quarters, La Salle University, Philadelphia, PA 19141.

Former La Salle Dean, Paul Doran, is Dead

Paul R. Doran, Ph.D., former Dean of Arts and Sciences at La Salle University where he served as an English professor for 38 years, passed away on May 7 at Abington Hospital. He was 67.

Dr. Doran, an expert on Restoration and Eighteenth Century Literature, particularly the works of Jonathan Swift, was an associate professor of English on the La Salle University faculty at the time of his death. He became ill about halfway through the spring semester and was forced to relinquish his teaching duties.

Dr. Doran, who joined the La Salle faculty in 1949, served as chairman of the English Department at the university from 1950 to 1952 and dean of the School of Arts and Sciences from 1956 to 1969. A former member of the Christian Brothers, the teaching order that conducts La Salle, he was known as Brother Gerard Roberts, F.S.C., when he served as dean and during his earlier years at the university.

Dr. James Butler, current chairman of La Salle's English Department, remembered Dr. Doran as a brilliant scholar, completely dedicated to his profession. He recalled a statement that Dr. Doran had written for the university's Guide for English Majors:

"Long Ago," wrote Dr. Doran, "I made a deliberate choice of a teaching career. I glory in the profession and feel that I have had a salutary and significant impact on the lives of thousands of young men and women. I cannot imagine myself doing anything else that is so satisfying."

Previously he had taught at La Salle College High School (1940-42 and 1945-49) and West Philadelphia Catholic High School for Boys (1943-45).

A native of Wilksburg, Pa., Dr. Doran earned a bachelor's degree in English, magna cum laude, from The Catholic University, in Washington, D.C., and master's and doctorate degrees in English from the University of Pennsylvania.

He is survived by his wife, Catherine E. (Gorman); a sister, Rosemary D. Burger, of Pittsburgh, and two nieces.

A mass of Christian Burial was sung at 11:00 A.M. on May 11 at Holy Angels Church, 70th Ave. and Old York Road, Philadelphia. Burial was in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery.

University Awarded Commonwealth Grant

La Salle University was awarded a $219,240 Differential Technology grant from the Pennsylvania Department of Education to purchase instructional equipment for undergraduate educational programs for 1986-87.

Brother Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D., president of La Salle, said that the grant was used to purchase computer and technological equipment for the university's undergraduate Schools of Arts and Sciences and Business Administration.

La Salle's president expressed his appreciation to the State Representatives and Senators for their support of the legislation which created a $20.3 million program within the Pennsylvania Department of Education to provide technology grants to many institutions of higher education in Pennsylvania.

"This grant enabled La Salle to purchase much needed instructional equipment to continue to improve our capacity to offer and enhance quality undergraduate programs," Brother Ellis added.

AIDS Research Pioneer Gives Holroyd Lecture

Robert C. Gallo, M.D., a pioneer in the research of causes of leukemia and AIDS presented a discussion on "Apocalyptic Acronyms: HTLV-III and AIDS" at the university's eighth annual Holroyd Lecture, on April 24 in the Union Ballroom on campus.

Dr. Gallo is chief of the Laboratory of Tumor Cell Biology at the National Cancer Institute of the National Institute of Health. His pioneering research enabled him to establish the existence of the first two human retroviruses, HTLV-I & II, which cause leukemias. In 1984, his research team identified HTLV-III, the third human retrovirus, as the causative agent of AIDS.

Immediately, prior to Dr. Gallo's lecture, the Holroyd Award for distinguished service to health professions was given to Dr. Henry G. (Hank) DeVincent, '56, a prominent orthopedic surgeon and senior attending surgeon at Holy Redeemer Hospital, Meadowbrook, Pa. Dr. DeVincent is a member of the university's Board of Trustees.

The Holroyd Lecture is held annually in honor of the late Dr. Roland Holroyd, professor emeritus and founder of the Biology Department at La Salle where he taught for 53 years. It is co-sponsored by the university's School of Fine Arts and Sciences and Alumni Medical Association.

Previous Holroyd Lectures at La Salle have included C. Everett Koop, surgeon general of the United States; Thomas E. Starzl, chief of surgery at the University of Pittsburgh Medical School and a well-known pioneer in liver transplantation; Michael E. DeBakey, chancellor of Baylor College of Medicine who is noted for treatment of cardiovascular diseases; and Edward J. Stemmler, '50, dean of the School of Medicine, University of Pennsylvania.

Urban Studies Center Honors Civic Leaders

In a city of neighborhoods, it is the community leaders who are seen as the bedrock of neighborhood conservation and revitalization. And it is these important people who often go unrecognized.

La Salle's Urban Studies and Community Services Center recognized seven neighborhood leaders at its 14th annual Community Service Awards Dinner on May 21 in the Union Ballroom, on campus. KYW-TV newscaster Jack Jones, '69, was the featured speaker.

All proceeds from the dinner benefit the Urban Center's neighborhood adult literacy classes and the English for Speakers of Other Languages (ESOL) Adult Learning Project. The program reaches over 250 adults each year in the Germantown, Logan, Olney and West Oak Lane area.

The awardees, hailing from the communities surrounding La Salle University, are all civic leaders who have made a commitment to work for a better community in which to live.

This year's recipients were Jalaine Chisholm of the Northwest Victim's Service; Mary Austin, of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; George Lankford, vice president of the Wistar Neighborhood Council; Bertram Strieb, assistant professor of physics at La Salle; Rev. Robert G. Coombe, pastor of the Lindly United Methodist Church; Joseph Richardson, a student at the Delaware Valley High School; and Rev. Dr. C.L. Pryor, pastor of the Corinthian Baptist Church.

Founded in 1968, the Urban Center's overall purpose is to assist in the physical, social, cultural and economic improvement of nearby neighborhoods through a wide variety of education, research, and technical assistance programs. The Center also aims to improve interracial understanding and cooperation between La Salle and its neighbors.

Explorers Win Fourth Commissioner's Cup

For the fourth consecutive year since joining the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference in 1983-84, La Salle's men's and women's varsities have won the Commissioner's Cup for overall supremacy in conference championship competition.

The outstanding performances of three spring teams clinched the over-all title for the Explorers. The softball team won its first MAAC championship by rallying for four runs in their last at-bat to defeat Army, and actually provide what proved to be the winning point differential over the Cadets (1½ points). The golf team finished in a best-ever second place at the MAAC Tournament, and the baseball team clinched second place in the standings by defeating the conference champion in two of three games at Fordham.

"This has been another outstanding year for La Salle's student-athletes," said Athletic Director Bob Mullen. "Our spring teams knew they would have to perform at their best if we were to win the Cup again, and they certainly have. And although only 13 of our 22 varsities compete in MAAC championships, this award is earned and shared by all of our athletes."

Three Explorer teams won MAAC titles, softball, men's swimming and women's basketball (regular season). In addition, four others took seconds in conference championship competition, baseball, golf, women's swimming and men's basketball (regular season).

The 23 points earned by the spring varsities gave La Salle a total of 84½ points, 1½ points ahead of Army. Both the men's and women's varsities finished second in their competitions, the men just 1½ point behind Army (47-46½), the women one point in back of Holy Cross (39-38).

La Salle's Athletic History To Be Published

How about some La Salle Sports Trivia? Really trivial trivia.

Like: Who was the captain of La Salle's first winning men's tennis team?

Or: What's the school record for softball victories in one season?

Or: Who was the men's soccer team coach in 1976? ... It wasn't Bill Wilkinson.

These, and all of your questions about La Salle's athletic history, will be found in the 125th anniversary souvenir magazine being published by the Sports Information Office.

This one-time only publication will include: a listing of all Explorer letter-winners in every varsity sport; all-time records for every sport; a complete listing of the University's Hall of Athletes members; and, of course, memories.

You can purchase this publication at all La Salle sports events, both in Hayman Hall and at The Palestra, throughout the 1987-88 school year. And you can be a part of this special project. Advertising space is available in the book (full-page, 1/2-page, 1/4-page and business card), with premiums, such as basketball season tickets and invitations to special events, for you and your business depending on your level of advertisement.

If you want to be a part of this project, see the ad elsewhere in this book, or call the Sports Information Office at 215-951-1605.

A CALL FOR VOLUNTEERS

La Salle's Art Museum has just opened a renovated cottage on the historic Belfield Farm at the center of the campus. This new annex of the Museum is intended for the use of volunteers who would act as guides for the museum and farm and would assist with cataloguing and other projects of the museum.

The basic requirement is an interest in art or history and three to four hours of service a week would be expected. Interested alumni (or their spouses) should call 951-1221 for more information.

The Class of 1987 Academic Award winners from the Evening Division were honored at a luncheon in the Ballroom on campus on May 16. Coming: La Salle's 125th Anniversary

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

This fall, La Salle University will begin the celebration of its 125th Anniversary, an occasion that will certainly be a time for taking stock, for honoring a tradition and a notable achievement.

The Anniversary also comes at an important time in the history of La Salle as the physical campus is being consolidated after some sizable growth; a new library is being completed; a revised core curriculum is being implemented, and major programs are being reviewed; the general nature of teaching and learning here is being considered anew in our future as a university and a Catholic university.

So we are planning to have our lectures and symposiums during the year take note of these themes and the Anniversary itself. Among those appearing in fall semester programs will be James P. Sterba, President of the American Catholic Philosophical Association ("The Constitution: A Fundamentally Flawed Document," September 17th); attorney Dan Burt, '64, counsel for General William Westmoreland in his libel action against CBS; noted author Joyce Carol Oates of Princeton ("An Afternoon With Joyce Carol Oates," September 29th); eminent sociologist Philip Rieff; Justice John Flaherty of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania ("The Pennsylvania Supreme Court and its Role in our Society," October 6th); John R. Coleman, former President of Haverford College; Donald H. Reiman ("Living Romanticism: English Romantics and Modern Popular Culture," October 20th); Sam Hynes, noted English scholar at Princeton University and former visiting professor at La Salle; Neal Miller, research psychologist at Rockefeller University (The Grimes Lecture: "How the Brain Affects the Health of the Body," October 24th); Professor James Kinneavy (October 30th and 31st); Father William Byron, President of the Catholic University of America (Fall Convocation, October 25th).

The Open House, sponsored by the Students' Government Association, (November 8th) and Campus Ministry's Justice Week (November 9-13), featuring Robert Lifton, are getting special attention, as are our special music and art programs. Among the latter will be an exhibition in our Art Museum of Charles Willson Peale's work at his historic farm, Belfield, now a central part of La Salle's campus, and an exhibition of the work of Paul Stankard, a nationally-known artist in glass and a current La Salle parent (October 16, 17, 18).

Additional special events to be held at La Salle during the Fall include the official opening of Urasenke—La Salle Japanese Tea Ceremony (September 27th); Alumni Hall of Athletes, Parents' Weekend and Athletic Alumni Homecoming (October 16, 17, 18); and the Alpha Epsilon Alumni Honor Society induction and presentation of the Signum Fidei Medal (November 20th).

For further information on Fall semester events, contact the News Bureau (215-951-1081) or the Public Affairs Office (215-951-1085).

Honor Roll of Donors

The Million Dollar Alumni Annual Fund

Alumni Annual Fund
GOAL: ONE MILLION DOLLARS

Dr. Fred J. Foley, Jr. (left), vice president for development, and Brother Charles E. Gresh, F.S.C. (right), director of the Annual Fund, congratulate Lawrence E. McAlee, Esq., '59, on the Alumni Annual Fund's success in achieving its 1986-87 goal of $1,000,000. During the past two years that Mr. McAlee has served as chairman of the Alumni Annual Fund, annual giving has increased dramatically from $600,998 in 1984-85.

Dear Friends:

It is once again my privilege to introduce our Honor Roll of Donors. As you will see, all the vital signs are good: number of donors, percentage of donors, average gift, and overall total. We are steadily approaching the levels which will be genuinely worthy of the lives poured out in the dynamic growth of our common enterprise. The accompanying list includes many examples of sacrificial generosity, especially on the part of givers who are facing other challenging demands—like tuition—at the same time.

The past year has been one of several, quite remarkable accomplishments for La Salle's fund-raising program:

(1) In July, the Council for Advancement and Support of Education and the USX Foundation, Inc. recognized the University for Distinguished Achievement in its Total Development Program and presented it with one of the 1987 Achievement in Mobilizing Support Awards. This was the first such national recognition bestowed on La Salle for its success in fund-raising.

(2) In 1986-87, the Alumni Annual Fund passed the $1,000,000 milestone for the first time in its rather brief history. Contributions from alumni and matching gifts generated by alumni totaled $1,050,819, an 11% increase over the previous year's record-setting amount. The million dollar plateau has been our goal for several years, and it has been attained sooner than many would have believed possible. We are, indeed, quite indebted to the many alumni whose tireless efforts on our behalf produced this result.

(3) As of June 30, 1987, total gifts, grants and pledges to Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's amounted to $12,651,447, 82% of the $15,345,000 we hope to attain by December 31, 1988. In conjunction with the extraordinary $11 million commitment for the construction of the new library by La Salle's principal benefactor, total extramural support for the University since July 1, 1984 now exceeds $23.6 million.

The occasion of our 125th anniversary in 1988 should give us pause to reflect on the generations who held on through hard times. Most of those were Christian Brothers, whose reward has come (or will come) in terms beyond impressionistic surveys and competitive statistics. Still, in human terms, we owe them more than we can ever repay. Moreover, many colleagues who are still with us have deserved well of us all, without commensurate reward in any tangible sense. Join us in donning thinking-caps during this year, to assure that our landmark observances will give honor where due.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Patrick Ellis, FSC

HIGHLIGHTS

All gifts and grants reported below involve contributions received between July 1, 1986 and June 30, 1987. Multiyear pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1987 will be published in subsequent Honor Rolls as payments are received. In accordance with Internal Revenue Service regulations, gifts of securities have been reported at the mean (average) between their highest and lowest values on the dates the gifts were made to La Salle University. Every effort has been made to assure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our sincere apology and notify us of the mistake (215-951-1539). Several of the contributions listed below are duplicated in more than one category (e.g. an individual contribution in excess of $1,000 that is also included in the Alumni total). The unduplicated total of gifts and grants listed in this report for 1986-87 is $3,882,360.

IN MEMORIAM GIFTS

Some of the most meaningful gifts the Annual Fund Office receives are made in honor or in memory of a beloved friend, colleague, or family member. This year, such gifts were made in the names of almost 25 individuals, an inspiring indication of the donors' regard for both the University and the individuals named. We are honored to accept these special gifts.

JOHN E. HIGGINS TO CHAIR '88 ALUMNI ANNUAL FUND REUNION GIFT CHAIRS NAMED GOAL SET AT $1,250,000

John E. Higgins, Jr. '66 will chair the 1987-88 Alumni Annual Fund Campaign and spearhead the effort for the success of La Salle's 125th anniversary year. Presently he is a senior vice president in the Branch Administration Department of First Pennsylvania Bank's Consumer and Banking Services Group.

In his capacity, Mr. Higgins has responsibility for the operations of more than 40 branch locations in Philadelphia, Delaware and Montgomery counties. Mr. Higgins announced that the 1987-88 alumni goal has been set for $1,250,000.

"My first commitment is to continue the momentum established by Brother Charles Gresh, Annual Fund Director, and Larry McAlee, the successful chairman since 1985," Higgins said. "Furthermore," he added, "I think that the recent announcement of the CASE/USX Foundation Distinguished Achievement Award for La Salle's Total Development program was a source of great pride and encouragement for all of our alumni. Even though our goal of $1,250,000 represents a 20% increase over last year's record-setting total, we believe that it is within our grasp and that it is quite appropriate for La Salle as it celebrates its 125th anniversary. We will, then, strive to achieve this year's goal—ever confident of our alumni's generosity and concern."

Brother Charles E. Gresh, F.S.C., director of the annual fund, has also announced the following gift representatives for their respective classes for Reunion '88:

Nicholas A. Policarpo, M.D., '38, Charles A.J. Halpin, Jr., Esq., '43, Thomas B. Harper, III, Esq., '48, Reverend Charles J. Day, '53, Joseph J. Panchella, '58, John B. Beal, '63, James R. Corbett, '68, Ronald J. Young, '73, Michael A. Tarsitano, '78, Gregory J. Cowhey, '83.

FACULTY/STAFF PROGRAM

During the past fiscal year, 213 faculty and staff members contributed a grand total of $47,818 to La Salle University, chiefly through the vehicle of payroll withholding. All of us who serve on the University Committee for Phase II of the Campaign for the 80's congratulate our colleagues for their extraordinary loyalty and generosity.

REUNION GIVING

In order to increase support and participation among alumni observing their reunion held every five years, a new Reunion Giving program was launched in 1983-84. The record of $91,116 with 941 givers in Reunion '86 was surpassed this year with a total of $96,491 from 958 alumni. Reunion gifts, then, represented 9.2% of the total raised in the 1987 Annual Fund.

UGO DONINI CLUB

Professor Ugo Donini (1901-1980) endeared himself to several generations of La Salle students through his thirty-two years of service as a teacher in the History Department. The Ugo Donini Club includes Alumni/ae, Faculty/Staff, Friends and Parents who contributed $250 or more, but less than $500, to La Salle University between July 1, 1986 and June 30, 1987. During the past fiscal year, 274 individual donors made contributions totaling $80,479 that qualified them for membership in the Ugo Donini Club.

BROTHER CLEMENTIAN CLUB

The Brother Clementian Club is made up of those Alumni/ae, Faculty/Staff, Friends and Parents who contributed up to $99 to La Salle University between July 1, 1986 and June 30, 1987. Brother E. Clementian, F.S.C. (1887-1961) embodied the ideals of Christian education in his total dedication to his students. During the past fiscal year, 4,485 individual donors made contributions totaling $123,674 that qualified them for membership in the Brother Clementian Club.

GIFTS OF ART

During 1986-87, a number of individuals generously contributed works of art to La Salle University's Art Museum. These gifts have served to enrich the educational and cultural resources which the Museum provides for the general public, the University's students, faculty, alumni and friends, and neighborhood residents/organizations in communities proximate to La Salle. The approximate value of the gifts of art donated to La Salle during the past fiscal year is $134,725. The Art Museum is, indeed, especially grateful to its many friends and benefactors including:

L.C. Davis, general manager of Sears-Roebuck and Company's facility on the Roosevelt Boulevard in Northeast Philadelphia, presents the Sears-Roebuck Foundation's 1987 contribution of $5,100 to Dr. Fred J. Foley, Jr., vice president for development. Over the past eight years, The Sears-Roebuck Foundation has contributed $34,800 to La Salle University.

PARENTS' PROGRAM

The Parents' Fund soared this year as goals were met and exceeded. The total of $39,051 that was raised from 506 donors represents a 15% increase in dollars over last year.

The growth in the Parents' Fund, in both dollars and participation, is indicative of strong support for La Salle and of our parents' desire for involvement. Our gifts directly benefit our children's careers. The full cost of educating a La Salle student is not absorbed by tuition; thus 25% of the cost of each student must come from other sources. The Parents' Program is a vital source of income. Each gift is received with gratitude.

PHONATHON VOLUNTEERS LEAD RECORD-SETTING ANNUAL FUND

The record-setting results achieved by the Alumni Annual Fund and the Parents' Program reflect the extraordinary efforts of the entire La Salle University family. This past year, 146 alumni/ae, faculty, staff, friends, parents and students conducted the volunteer phase of this effort in six major phonathons held in Center City. The Annual Fund Office deeply appreciates the generosity of these companies that hosted the phonathons:

Arthur Andersen and Company
Fidelity Bank
First Pennsylvania Bank
Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company
Price Waterhouse and Company

We are especially grateful to John J. French '53, Phonathon Chairman; Marlene De La Cruz '83, John E. Higgins, Jr. '66, Edward J. LoCasale '69, Frank J.

Noonan '55, John Slanga '71 and Charles "Bud" Wahl '58.

The Annual Fund Office is deeply indebted to the following volunteer staff persons: Timothy J. Browne, Sr., Mrs. Jean Cairo and Brother Fermin Martinez, F.S.C.

In addition, special thanks are due to the following organizations which actively participated in the Annual Fund Program:

Alumni Board of Directors
Fidelity Bank Alumni
Fiji Fraternity
First Pennsylvania Bank Alumni
Honors Program
Phi Gamma Nu Sorority
Phi Kappa Theta Fraternity
Reserve Officers Training Corps
Students' Government Association

We are grateful to the following phonathon volunteers whose loyalty and commitment ensured the Program's success:

Big 5 Video History Available to Alumni

Tom Gola ... Ken Durrett ... Michael Brooks ... Frank Corace ... Lionel Simmons ... THE BIG FIVE ... The first game of the first Big 5 doubleheader at The Palestra featured La Salle and Muhlenberg on Saturday, Dec. 3, 1955. Some of the most memorable events in Philadelphia sports annals have been Big 5 games. Every sports fan can give a play-by-play recounting of his favorite Big 5 game. And now available is a video history of Philadelphia's Big 5. 3M Corporation and Halcyon Days have joined the Big 5 universities in producing a 60-minute tape of the Best of the Big 5. It will be available through the schools in early November. The cost is $29.95, plus $3.50 shipping and handling, and can be ordered by calling 1-800-328-5727, extension 21. You can charge either Master Card or Visa. But most importantly, say you're ordering from La Salle University, because each school receives a share of the cost for every tape it sells. Call early to reserve your copy, and spend some time during the Christmas holidays reliving your memorable Big 5 moments.
